Objections Dim Hopes For Passage Of Seal Plan

Criticism by Elliott And Smith Expected To Reduce Chances For This Session

By James D. Secrest.
Post Staff Writer

Prospects for enactment of a complete reform in the District government by the present Congress were believed fading yesterday in the face of mounting criticism of the Seal reorganization plan by Federal departments.

The District Commissioners submitted the Seal plan, practically unchanged, to the Senate and House District committees along with mimeographed copies of complaints by the Comptroller General's Office, the budget director, the Interior Department, the War Department and the Civil Service Commission.

While committee members withheld comment until they had time to read the correspondence, they admitted that the objections probably would raise new obstacles to a legislative shakeup of the District government.

The most serious objections to the Seal plan came from Budget Director Harold D. Smith, who criticized the proposal to exempt the District from Federal control of its finances through the Budget Bureau and the GAO.

Elliott Is Caustic

"In view of the intimate relationship between the Federal Government, through Congress and certain of the executive departments and agencies, and the government of the District of Columbia," Smith wrote, "it may be unwise to remove some of the existing ties between the two governments as contemplated in the proposed bill."

The budget director then cited the provisions to exempt the District from the budget and accounting acts.

"While we are all much interested in securing legislation that would authorize genuine improvements in the present reorganization of the local government," Smith continued, "I do not feel that this draft of proposed legislation as submitted in its present form can be considered an adequate or final solution."

He added that the Budget Bureau had no objections, however, to the Commissioners submitting the bill to Congress along with the comments of the Federal officials consulted by the bureau.

The most caustic criticism, and the lengthiest, came from R. W. Elliott, Acting Comptroller General, who assailed District accounting practices, chiefly in the past. Finally, he suggested that the G. A. O. either be given the same control of District expenditures that it exerts over Federal finances or that it be divorced entirely from the municipal set-up.

The G. A. O., whose criticism aroused the ire of District officials who have battled with the office in the past over accounting practices, went back to 1935 to list irregularities uncovered by an examination of District books.

Charges "Passive Resistance"

"All efforts of this office to cause adoption of practices calculated to correct the existing deficiencies," Elliott said, "appeared to have met with a form of passive resistance.

"The general accounting plan for the District has, as a result of persistent urging, been only partially adopted. It has not, however, progressed to the point where advantages contemplated are secured.

"There is present in the entire accounting procedure of the municipal government of the District of Columbia a lack of centralized control, which was reported in the

Labor Board Inquiry Calls 3 in Cabinet

Edison and Miss Perkins Are Excused; Two Interior Officials to Testify On 'Blackjacking' of Employers

By John B. Oakes.
Post Staff Writer

The Smith committee investigating the National Labor Relations Board announced last night that it has subpenaed the Secretaries of the Navy, Interior and Labor or their representatives to testify regarding changes the NLRB had attempted to "blackjack" employers.

The subpenas, secretly decided upon last week, were issued to determine the extent to which Government departments and agencies have cooperated with the NLRB in bringing pressure on alleged violators of the Wagner Act.

Subpenas were also served on George R. Cooksey, secretary of the RFC, and Capt. H. E. Collins, director of the Procurement Division of the Treasury Department.

A checkup late last night revealed that none of the three Secretaries would actually appear at the hearing this morning. The Navy and Labor departments were excused by the committee after giving assurance yesterday that they had not engaged in the practice of withholding contracts from firms accused by the NLRB of violating the Wagner Act.

The Interior Department, however, will be represented at today's hearing by Commissioner John C. Page, of the Bureau of Reclamation, and by Joel David Wolfsohn, assistant to the Commissioner of the General Land Office.

Although he was not subpenaed, Chairman Emil Schram, of the RFC, is expected to appear today together with Cooksey, while the procurement division will be represented by Frank Healey, assistant to Collins.

The hearings today will form a sequel to testimony given before

Nazis Sink Sixth British Destroyer

Captain and 156 Victims of U-Boat; English List 2,271 Navy Men Killed

London, Feb. 19.—The Admiralty announced today that the destroyer Daring had been torpedoed and sunk. Only one officer and four seamen were rescued. Nine other officers and 148 seamen are missing—feared drowned.

It was the sixth of the 179 destroyers Great Britain had at the outbreak of the war to be sent to the bottom, and the first conceded to be the result of a submarine attack.

Believed Alone on Patrol

In two instances, the loss was said to have been due to a mine or a torpedo. Two others were attributed to mines. The fifth was said to have been caused by a collision with another ship of the British navy.

While no detail was given, the heavy loss of life was taken as an indication that the Daring was sunk on a lonely patrol, instead of in convoy, as the German radio would imply.

The Daring was a sister ship of the Duchess, sunk in a collision last December. Completed in 1932, the Daring, which had a displacement of 1,375 tons, was armed with four 4.7-inch, six smaller guns, and eight 21-inch torpedo tubes. She could step up to a speed of 36 knots.

2,271 Deaths Listed

The Daring was the twenty-eighth of Britain's naval craft to go down in the intensifying war at sea. Fourteen of these were capital ships, destroyers or submarines, the rest armed trawlers in the mine-sweeping service.

Unofficial tabulation of personnel losses to Britain's navy listed 2,271 killed, including the Daring's 157, and 604 as missing.

The five other destroyers the British navy has lost are the Blanche, the Gypsy, the Duchess, the Grenville and the Exmouth.

According to the official communique from the German high command, four British convoys were attacked yesterday by U-boats. This official statement said "steamships and tankers" in three convoys were sunk and that a destroyer, presumably the Daring, was sent to the bottom.

While admitting the loss of the destroyer, British official circles said the rest of the Nazi communique was "bunk."

Allies Lose 672,516 Tons

London, Feb. 19 (AP).—The British admiralty announced today the total British naval tonnage lost since the start of the war stood at 108,800.

Allied merchant shipping losses were put at 672,516 tons, a total of 165 vessels, from the beginning of the war to February 16. Neutral losses were listed at 389,008 tons, comprising 132 ships.

Reds Predict Mannerheim Line Collapse

Finland Claims Soviet Division Destroyed After A Month's Battle

By Witt Hancock,
Associated Press Staff Writer

Moscow (Tuesday), Feb. 20.—Complete confidence in the inevitable and complete collapse of the Mannerheim Line and of the Helsinki government was voiced in private and public discussion in Russia today as the Red army reported its offensive was "developing successfully" on the Karelian Isthmus.

The regular communique from Leningrad headquarters said action Monday consisted almost altogether of mopping up in the fortified area south of Viipuri, reported cut off Sunday when the Red army advanced suddenly to within 6 miles of the city and isolated the Kivisto fortresses which have served as the Gulf of Finland gatepost for the Mannerheim Line.

(The communique made no mention of Finnish reports that the Eighteenth Russian Division had been wiped out, and 18,000 Red army soldiers killed or captured.)

Allies Are Criticized

In the Soviet press, private conversation and in public lectures, confidence was reflected that the twenty-second anniversary of the Red army Friday would witness announcement of a break-through of the Mannerheim Line.

A dispatch of Tass, official news agency, from Stockholm, said the Helsinki government was doomed when the Swedish government turned down a Finnish request for direct military aid, and that anyway the Red army is invincible.

The dispatch declared the British-French allies were attempting to blackmail Sweden into giving Finland direct military aid.

The communique issued early today said several Islands and coastal stations north of the Kivisto area had been occupied.

Helsinki, Feb. 19.—Further information today on the extent of the Soviet advance on the Karelian Isthmus shows that it has been deeper than generally believed here and strengthens the probability that the relaxation of Russian pressure means only a breathing spell, not a final end of the offensive.

The Russians have pushed their way into the main Mannerheim Line on the west side of the Isthmus and Viipuri is now under fire from ordinary 6-inch batteries—a far different matter from the long range shelling to which it had been subjected earlier.

Thus when the Russians have had time to consolidate their new positions, bring up their artillery and munitions and install fresh troops, they will be in better position for a new thrust into the heart of Finland.

This serious side of the situation is offset to some extent tonight by the official announcement of a

Turks Gird for War In Balkans, Near East; Strengthen Defenses

Weygand Says He Is Ready 'For Instantaneous Action'

With the French Army in Syria, Feb. 19.—In the first interview he has given since the war broke out, Gen. Maxime Weygand, commander of the vast force being massed in the Near East by France and Britain, today modestly described the great army he is building here as "a fire department, ready for instantaneous action."

"We have hard, determined enemies everywhere," the general declared. "It is not known, where or when we will have to strike or who will strike us—but we're prepared."

The eyes of France's 72-year-old military genius, who was chief of staff under Foch in the World War, twinkled as he went on:

"I am a fireman, ready to put out fire anywhere it breaks out. There is nothing romantic about a fireman, only work and preparation. But our fire department is ready for a thorough job."

From my personal observations and reliable information I believe around 250,000 seasoned and well-equipped troops have already been concentrated in this region and its environs.

The staffs are complete and additional troops can easily be rushed from France and North Africa. Within two or three weeks, the forces could almost be doubled in size.

People Warned To Be Prepared For 'Supreme Effort;' Press Flays Nazis

By the United Press

Ankara, Feb. 19.—The government tonight decided to apply the national defense law, which will give it virtual dictatorial powers, and newspapers warned the people that, as non-belligerent allies of Britain and France, they must be prepared for a "supreme effort" this spring.

It was understood the National Assembly would be convoked tomorrow or Wednesday to confirm the government's "full powers" and that measures would be instituted immediately to get the nation's economic, financial and military structure in shape to cope with a possible extension of the European war to the Balkans or the Near East.

Press Attacks Germany

Newspapers in Istanbul attacked Germany, bitterly accusing Berlin of a policy of "bluff" and "propaganda."

Reliable informants said the government's decision means that the foreign situation is such that Turkey must be prepared for any eventuality, including "drastic action."

The decision caused widespread popular concern as it was feared that the government foresaw a situation which might result in this country's entry into the war.

The assertion of Foreign Minister Saracoglu on the eve of the recent Balkan entente conference that Turkey is "not neutral" was reaffirmed.

Rigid Control Provided

The defense act contains measures for strengthening Turkey's military defenses, for control of imports and exports by the government and for reorganization of various industries to supply the needs of the Turkish armed forces.

The law empowers the cabinet to apply general or partial mobilization when it considers that an extraordinary situation has arisen.

It was recalled that the National Assembly on January 19 authorized the government to assume "full powers" (a virtual dictatorship) if necessary.

The law also provides for severe measures to prevent speculative activities harmful to the country's economic or military integrity.

Newspapers warned Berlin that Germany has no chance of maneuvering this country into a position of "neutrality" while authoritative informants said the government considers it to be Turkey's duty to make every effort to assure the desired outcome (that is, an Allied victory) of the war.

Recalling recurrent rumors, such as one that Russia was concentrating 500,000 men in the Caucasus, newspapers said these tales are part of a propaganda campaign designed to frighten the Turkish government.

Russian Desertions Reported

Copyright by New York Times

Rome, Feb. 19.—Italian newspapers today carry a story from Istanbul that Russian troops have deserted across the Caucasus frontier into Turkey.

A group of infantrymen—some reports say as much as a battalion—are supposed to have gone over to Turkey. There the authorities disarmed them and advised the Russians that they could come and get the arms. A cavalry squadron was sent into Turkey on that mission, but once there the cavalrymen are also supposed to have refused to return.

Another episode which is said to have been confirmed is that a number of Russian technicians working in the textile factories of Cesarea refused to return to Russia recently.

FCA Shake-up Believed Begun As Evans Quits

Counsel's Resignation Is First Development In Black's Regime

By Alfred Friendly.
Post Staff Writer

The abrupt announcement of the resignation of Peyton R. Evans, general counsel of the Farm Credit Administration, was seen yesterday as heralding a series of executive personnel shake-ups, indicating a break with the Administration's previous policies.

Evans' resignation was the first major personnel development in administration of the FCA's new governor, A. G. Black, former Agriculture Department official who obtained the post December 20, 1939, at the conclusion of a long and bitter controversy on the organization's administrative status. The former governor, F. F. Hill, resigned when President Roosevelt supported Secretary Wallace's contention that

Betsey Roosevelt Files Cross-Suit

Los Angeles, Feb. 18 (AP).—Mrs. Betsey Cushing Roosevelt filed a cross-complaint today in the divorce suit of James Roosevelt, son of the President.

She asked a divorce on the ground of cruelty and desertion.

The action asked court approval of a property settlement, which she said had been agreed upon, and which provides a payment of certain sums for the support of herself and their two children.

Details of the property settlement were not disclosed, but the petition said the agreement would be submitted for court approval.

Donahey Balks As 3d-Term Stalking Horse

Refusal to Run Opens Ohio to Free-for-All In Democratic Ranks

By Robert C. Albright
Post Staff Writer

Senator "Honest Vic" Donahey yesterday kicked a prop out of Ohio's third-term boom for President Roosevelt and cleared the way for "bona fide" candidates to enter the Buckeye State's Democratic primaries.

A State organization build-up for delivery of Ohio's 52 convention votes to Roosevelt was transformed into a free-for-all contest when Donahey, the State's biggest vote getter, refused to run as a favorite son stalking horse for the President.

Friends said Donahey was neither anti-Roosevelt nor pro-Garner, and he has never voiced opposition to a third term. His action, they said, was dictated solely by personal and local political considerations.

Donahey Calls It Subterfuge

But his withdrawal had the unmistakable effect of checking, at least temporarily, State organization third-term plans and clearing the way for Vice President Garner to enter Ohio in opposition to a substitute Roosevelt candidate.

At a late hour last night, Garner managers had reached no decision, but with Donahey out of the "favorite" son race they were expected to file in Ohio against any third-term ticket as they have in Illinois.

Backers of at least two other candidates were urging their men to make a similar move—Senator Wheeler, of Montana, and Federal Security Administrator McNutt.

Wheeler is pledged not to enter any primary in which the Presi-

3,500 Long Troops to Face Poll Brigade of 20,000 Today

By the Associated Press

New Orleans, Feb. 19.—Thirty-five hundred National Guardsmen stood to their arms tonight amid mounting fear that bloodshed will underscore Louisiana's verdict on the Huey Long machine in tomorrow's runoff primary for the Governorship.

Gov. Earl K. Long mobilized the soldiers today and said they would be used against the poll-watching "Jackson Brigade" if that organization of World War veterans "starts trouble" — trouble he predicted would flare in New Orleans.

The brother of the slain Huey seeks the Democratic nomination, equivalent to election, against "reform" candidate Sam Houston Jones, who is striving to drive from power the last remnants of the organization unbeaten since "the Kingfish" first shaped it in 1928.

Heading the "Jackson Brigade" is fiery State Senator James A. Noe, former ally of Huey Long, archfoe of Earl. Noe joined Jones after his own defeat in the first primary.

"There will be squads with trucks, machine guns and gas equipment and whatever else they need to dampen Jimmy's enthusiasm," Long said in announcing the militia call.

"I just hope Jimmy Noe is in front of his Jackson brigade tomorrow."

Noe declared the mobilization and appointment of 1,600 armed special police for poll duty tomorrow was "to frighten voters away from the polls."

He said the brigade, now about 20,000 strong, would be armed only with cameras to photograph any election violations committed, that its members would work for peace, start no violence.

Readers in All Walks of Life Praise 'Our Town in Pictures'

Housewives, Parents And Officials Laud New Post Feature

Surprise at the many and wonderful things District public schools do for children heightened the compliments readers gave The Post yesterday for the "Our Town in Pictures" section which made its first appearance in Sunday's Post.

All sorts of people—society leaders, city officials, mothers, and people who remembered going to school themselves—liked the new eight-page picture section. Printers and photographers remarked on its technical excellence; citizens praised it as a public service; and many readers learned with interest and surprise how much there is to know about modern education.

One mother pointed out how such a picture-story of the schools can help parents select a school for their children; and a Senator's wife whose eldest is in a private school said after reading Sunday's Post she was thinking of sending her youngest to public school in the District.

"The District schools must be quite a model for the rest of the country," said Mrs. Lister Hill, wife of the junior Senator from Alabama. "I've never been through any of them; your pictures gave me the most intimate view of them I have had so far. I've been thinking

Norse May Put Altmark Case Up to League

Foreign Minister Flays English Invasion; Nazi Tension Eases

By the Associated Press

Oslo, Feb. 19.—Accusing the British government of acting in "open conflict with principles which it has itself so often proclaimed," Norway served notice tonight she might put Britain on trial by taking the Altmark case before the League of Nations "or some other tribunal."

The indication of this jittery neutral's course in the controversy arising from the rescue of 300 British prisoners from the German ship Altmark was given by Foreign Minister Halvdan Koht at a special session of the Storting.

Roosevelt May Be Invited

Berlin dispatches, meanwhile, said diplomatic tension between Norway and Germany had eased considerably, with official Nazi sources "impressed" by Norway's strong stand toward Britain.

In London, it was said authoritatively that Foreign Secretary Halifax had rejected Norway's demand for returning the released Britons but that "amicable discussions" were continuing.

Koht's reference to "some other tribunal" raised interesting speculation in view of a suggestion in the Oslo Shipping Times that President Roosevelt be asked to head an investigating commission.

Calls Disregard Unjustified.

In a long review of the case, Koht said the Altmark was a state vessel and admitted she was armed with antiaircraft guns, but was perfectly within her rights to go through Norwegian waters.

The only illegal action of the German vessel, he said, was the use

Stockholm, Feb. 19.—King Gustav was believed tonight to have averted a possible government crisis in Sweden by a declaration to the people supporting the Swedish government's policy of giving no direct military aid to Finland.

He told his people that, as much as he regretted it, the government had no alternative but to turn down Finland's request for such help.

Immediately after the King's statement, leaders of a group which was campaigning against the government gave up the fight with the assertion they could not go against the King.

The King's declaration said that if Sweden gave Finland outright military assistance in her fight with Russia the country certainly would be drawn into war between the

The Chief Executive, who inspected the Atlantic defenses of the Canal Zone Sunday, said in a press conference aboard the U. S. S. Tuscaloosa the specific localities visited could not be mentioned.

He laughed in a manner indicating there was nothing to it when asked whether he would meet European statesmen on the cruise.

Sale of Eight U. S. Liners To Belgians Is Approved

Transfer of eight United States Lines ships to Belgian registry through their sale to a Belgian corporation was approved by the Maritime Commission yesterday with apparent blessing of the State Department.

This third move to get the ships from under the United States flag so they can continue service in combat zones banned to American ships by the neutrality law, was immediately criticized in the House by Representative Fish (Republican), of New York, as a subterfuge.

The Maritime Commission said it had been informed that officers and directors of the purchasing corporation, the Societe Maritime Anversoise, and the owners of 60 per cent of that corporation are Belgian citizens, while 40 per cent of the corporation is owned by the United States Lines. It said the ships "will become Belgian vessels, subject exclusively to the laws and regulations of the Kingdom of Belgium."

At the State Department it was said Secretary of State Hull took the stand there was no objection to bona fide transfer of ships to a neutral company and flag, if at least 60 per cent of the ownership rests with foreigners, and providing no question will arise of possible claims to be supported by this Government through loss of property or lives. It was said the transfer announced by the Maritime Commission appeared to conform to those conditions.

Fish, however, declared at the Capitol that the ships had been transferred on a down payment of only $137,000.

"This means that the United States Lines has a first mortgage of 97 per cent in these boats," he said.

POLITICAL LOW DOWN: Several Cabinet members now say that Hull is by far the best bet for the Democratic nomination; that if they had to bet they'd bet on him. They're in excellent position to know.

House Opens Debate on Hull Trade Treaties

Rep. Coffee Plans To Seek Senate's O. K. on Pacts

Cleavage within Democratic ranks was indicated yesterday as the Administration's bill to extend the Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act underwent its baptism of fire in House debate.

While House leaders expressed confidence that the measure ultimately will pass by at least a 40-vote majority, it was expected that the tally will be somewhat closer on an amendment that would make the agreements dependent on Senate approval.

Representative Harry B. Coffee, conservative Nebraska Democrat, said yesterday that he would offer this amendment, which the Administration contends would hamstring the trade agreements program.

Coffee Claims G. O. P. Support

Claiming that his proposal has "a good chance" of acceptance, Coffee intimated that he had been assured of Republican support, and also of the backing of a group of Democrats from States fearing injury from the reciprocal trade agreements.

Filled with politics in a political year, the bill was given its send-off in House debate yesterday by Chairman Doughton, of the Ways and Means Committee, who lavished his praises not only on the trade program, but also on its chief protagonist, Secretary Hull.

The Secretary of State, said Doughton, is a "statesman, scholar, thinker and man of action," whose record "will stand as a monument which neither passage of time nor achievements of others can ever destroy."

A Presidential Nomination?

Asked later if he intended his remarks to constitute an unofficial nomination of Secretary Hull for the Presidency, Doughton smilingly replied that he knew of "no man better qualified—and few his equal."

Doughton told the House that Hull was "one of the greatest Secretaries of State this Nation has ever produced" and was "entitled to the unanimous acclaim of every citizen, not only of our own country, but of all the nations in the world."

The reciprocal trade program is the "safest, surest, simplest and only practical method of rebuilding our foreign trade on a secure basis," Doughton told the House, while Republicans denounced the agreements as injurious to American agriculture.

Knutson Asks For Barter

Representative Crowther (Republican), of New York, acting floor manager for the minority, declared that tariff protection at the present time is "totally inadequate," and Representative Knutson (Republican), of Minnesota, demanded that all trade agreements be placed on "a barter basis."

In the midst of one of Knutson's arguments, Representative Buck (Democrat), of California, protested that the speaker was dragging in a "red herring."

Wildly waving his arms, the Minnesotan shouted in reply that "anyone who refuses to be a rubber stamp is a red herring!"

Representative Carlson (Republican), of Kansas, warned that future trade agreements would be with "nations that are in competition with American farmers"; while Representative Robertson (Democrat), of Virginia, said that agriculture had benefited thus far under the program.

The proposed amendment of Representative Coffee, which will be bitterly fought by Administration forces, would give the trade agreements treaty status and would require a two-thirds senatorial vote for their approval. It is expected that some Democratic support for this amendment will come from Rocky Mountain cattle States, from Florida and perhaps from Texas.

Disney Has Amendment

Another Democratic-sponsored amendment will be proposed by Representative Disney, Ways and Means Committee member from Oklahoma. This amendment would prevent the State Department, in negotiating trade agreements, from altering present excise taxes on the importation of certain commodities including petroleum and coal.

Meanwhile, the American Farm Bureau Federation sent every member of the House a wire urging extension of the Trade Agreement Act, with the proviso that future agreements have approval of the Secretaries of Agriculture and Commerce as well as State.

Donahey Rejects Stalking Horse Role, Throws Ohio Race Open

dent's name is presented to the voters, while McNutt has made clear he is a candidate only in event Mr. Roosevelt does not run.

But in Ohio, Mr. Roosevelt's name can not go on the ballot unless he files a written declaration of consent. The State organization had planned to run Donahey, but to cast the delegation's vote in convention for Roosevelt.

Donahey spiked this yesterday by declining such an "honor" as a "subterfuge." Ohio Democratic leaders backing the third-term bid now are expected to name Charles Sawyer, Democratic national committeeman, to take Donahey's place on the ticket. In Columbus, Sawyer said another "favorite son" will be designated shortly to head up a pro-Roosevelt delegation.

Free Action Preferred

Donahey's statement declining to run stressed his part in adoption of an Ohio primary amendment "that would give all candidates and the voters full and free participation in a State-wide primary." He said he has raised his voice many times since "against the emasculation of the primary act by those political leaders who would hark back to the 'good old days.'"

If he now were to accept the favorite son honor in name and not in fact he said, "it would nullify the law and deprive the people of a power that is guaranteed by our State constitution."

"Any candidate who files in Ohio for President of the United States must give his written consent to such delegates as desire to support him, indicating he is a bona fide candidate for the Presidential nomination," the Ohio Senator pointed out.

Field Open to All

"Therefore, by removing myself from the picture, no embarrassment need attach to any bona fide candidate for President who desires to file in Ohio, nor to the controlling committees who indorsed the President for a third term at their meeting."

He said he appreciated the offer tendered by the State's Democratic executive and State central committees at their meeting last Saturday, "but in good conscience I am compelled to reject same. Acceptance would be a subterfuge."

The "sense" of the state organization meeting, as expressed in a resolution, was that if the President runs "the delegates from the State of Ohio shall cast their votes for him; that if he is not a candidate for President their votes shall be cast first for the first-choice favorite son . . ."

Donahey originally balked at the "stalking horse" plan after Arthur Limbach, State Democratic chairman, disclosed the third-term maneuver several weeks ago. At the same time, former Representative Charles O. West, of Ohio, was reported to have outlined it to the President here. West later told reporters Mr. Roosevelt gave no sign of displeasure. Donahey also conferred with the President, but withheld a decision pending Saturday's State Democratic pow-wow.

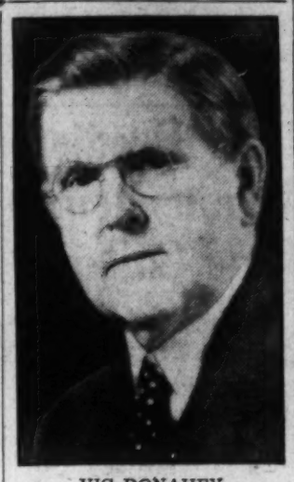
Garner Faces Opposition

Garner managers recently indicated they would enter Ohio only if Donahey withdrew, as the Vice President has remained out of "favorite son" States. They carefully avoided any immediate announcement. If Garner enters Ohio, he will find himself opposed by a Democratic organization as solid as the Kelly-Nash-Horner third-term combination he is now bucking in Illinois.

The President's name was filed in Illinois, without any signed declaration of candidacy. Garner leaders in Illinois yesterday were investigating the legality of the move, but insisted they had "no immediate program" for filing any objections. Other States Garner has entered include Wisconsin, Oregon and California, and he is expected to enter Nebraska. He has openly sought a primary in Georgia, where the State committee otherwise will pick a pro-Roosevelt delegation. In Wisconsin, Nebraska, Illinois and Ohio, the Vice President would be directly pitted against Roosevelt tickets.

Signs of an organization split over Kelly-Nash-Horner machine bids for Illinois State offices were watched here with interest yesterday by the Garner people. They were elated at Donahey's withdrawal in Ohio. "Good for Vic Donahey," said Senator Burke, of Nebraska, a Garner booster. "I hope Garner goes into Ohio and all other primaries."

In Boston, Senator Wheeler would not comment on reports that he himself might enter the Ohio primaries. He said he was opposed "in principle" to a third term, said he did not think the President wanted one, but said Mr. Roosevelt could get the nomination "if he wants it."



VIC DONAHEY

G. O. P. Report Commended

McNutt managers have considered filing in Ohio if Garner did, but only if the Hoosier candidate is not in competition with a Roosevelt slate.

Meanwhile, Glenn Frank's Republican program committee report and its 28,000-word recommendations received favorable comment from Republicans in and out of Congress.

In Topeka, former Governor Alf Landon, who opposed creation of the Frank committee two years ago, called it "sound and constructive."

At the Capitol, Senate Minority Leader McNary termed it "comprehensive and commendable." Representative Hope, of Kansas, leader of the Congressional Republican farm bloc, said it was "a very fair report and a liberal one." Senator Townsend, of Delaware, said it was "constructive" without attempting to write the party's platform. Senator Austin, of Vermont, called it "a magnificent job." Senator Capper, of Kansas, said it was "generally good."

Democrats generally ignored the report, or wisecracked, as did Senator Pepper, of Florida, that it showed "symptoms of that disease known as 'out-itis.'"

Kelly, Foley Back Farley

Miami, Fla., Feb. 19 (AP).—Former Lieut. Gov. Francis Kelly, of Massachusetts, said today he believed Postmaster General James A. Farley would carry the Massachusetts preferential primary April 30 and also would win the November general election.

Kelly's remarks were made as he and District Attorney William J. Foley, also of Boston, sat down to talk politics with Farley at a private luncheon.

Kelly is a Democratic candidate for the Massachusetts gubernatorial nomination.

Foley, who has been Boston's district attorney for 14 years, made only this comment after the meeting:

"Massachusetts is indicative of the feeling of New England. It is overwhelmingly for Farley."

Stelle Leads Revolt Against Kelly Machine

Illinois Democrats Split in Hot Fight; 'Bossism' Charged

By the Associated Press

Springfield, Ill., Feb. 19.—A rebellion against the Kelly-Nash-Horner organization's "harmony" ticket gained new recruits in Democratic ranks today amid charges of "bossism" and indications of a turbulent primary election battle.

The controversy revolved about the slate of candidates approved by Mayor Edward J. Kelly of Chicago, National Committeeman P. A. Nash and Gov. Henry Horner and indorsed by the party's State central committee.

Democratic aspirants dissatisfied with the selections rushed here to file petitions before the midnight deadline while steps to form an "antiorganization" ticket for the April 9 primary took definite shape.

Stelle Opposes Hershey

Lieut. Gov. John Stelle, State Auditor Edward J. Barrett, State Senator George Maypole and State Representative S. Adamowski, minority leader in the House, moved swiftly to enter races against entrants backed by the party chieftains.

Visions of peace vanished when Stelle bolted from the "regular" camp and barged into the contest for the gubernatrial nomination against State Chairman Harry B. Hershey, who was selected for the race when Gov. Horner decided against a third term because of ill health.

Barrett filed for renomination with a denunciation of "self-appointed bosses" who dropped him from the organization list. Senator Maypole decided to run for lieutenant governor against State Treasurer Louie E. Lewis.

Adamowski swung into the fight for the nomination for United States Senator. He was followed into the eleventh hour lists by Gael Sullivan, youthful aide of Mayor Kelly. Unless one of the competitors withdraws, both will compete against Senator James M. Slattery, the incumbent anl "harmony" candidate.

Sullivan Stirs Speculation

The entrance of Sullivan, Illinois national committeeman of the Young Democratic group, loosed a freshet of speculation. Thomas Garry, who directs circulation of petitions for the Cook County (Chicago) organization, told reporters Sullivan had the support of the Kelly-Nash unit.

Senator Slattery sent word from Washington that he was in the primary "to stay."

Petitions have been filed to place the names of Thomas E. Dewey, Representative Hamilton Fish (Republican), of New York, and Mayor Fiorello LaGuardia on the Republican Presidential preference ballot and to put President Roosevelt and Vice President Garner in a preferential showdown on the Democratic side. Only Dewey and Garner, however, signed declarations of candidacy.

Fleming Warns of Wage-Hour Law Penalties

By Felix Cotten.

Col. Philip B. Fleming, wage-hour administrator, yesterday warned employers to observe the minimum-wage requirements of the wage-hour law and thus avoid employe suits for double the amount of unpaid wages, as provided for by the statute.

The warning was Fleming's first official act after the Senate had confirmed his appointment as administrator.

He called attention to the decision yesterday of a Federal court in Fayettesville, N. C., awarding to five section hands of the Atlantic Coast Line Railroad a total judgment of $1,079.20. The sum represented double the amount of wages the employes claimed was due them, plus attorneys' fees.

The decision, wage-hour officials said, could be extended to apply to several thousand A. C. L. maintenance of way employes. If so, the amount of damages would total several hundred thousand dollars, they said.

United States District Judge I. M. Meekins held that the railroad company had violated the minimum wage provisions of the act by making excessive deductions from pay for housing, police protection, fuel and other facilities.

Col. Fleming said he was calling attention to the A. C. L. suit in the hope that establishments that had not "put their houses in order" would do so "before situations like this accumulate to serious proportions."

Meanwhile, the Wage and Hour Division applied in Federal Court in Chicago for an injunction restraining Swift & Co., large meat packing concern, from violating overtime provisions of the law.

Swift and company is charged with failure to pay time and a half for overtime to a majority of the 5,000 employes in the Chicago plant who were required to work in excess of the statutory 42 hours per week.

Witnesses representing the railroads warned the wage and hour division's special committee meeting here yesterday to study minimum wage conditions in the railroad industry, that, if the minimum wage level were increased from 30 to 40 cents an hour, the roads would turn to mechanization to offset increased labor costs.

Warship Sales Up to Congress, Woodson Rules

Scandinavian Feelers Reveal Necessity Of Vote in Each Case

By John G. Norris

Secretary Edison has received a legal ruling from the judge advocate general of the Navy, Rear Admiral Walter B. Woodson, that warships cannot be sold to foreign nations without specific approval of Congress.

Officials said the opinion holds that under certain circumstances, tenders, tankers, supply ships and other auxiliary vessels might be sold, but that law and precedent requires special action by Congress before any combat ships can be disposed of except as hulks.

The opinion was given in connection with the survey ordered ten days ago by President Roosevelt as to surplus arms and other Army and Navy equipment which might be sold to the Scandinavian countries and other neutrals seeking American aid in arming.

Replaced Guns Disclosed

The study, while not yet complete, has revealed the existence of a number of portable guns used by landing force parties which have been replaced by weapons of later design and which may be declared surplus for sale, it was said.

In the same category as these guns, which are mostly six-pounders, are a number of Springfield rifles and Colt revolvers, officials said.

Inquiries have been received from foreign countries, it was said, particularly Sweden, as to whether we would be willing to sell any naval vessels.

70 Ships Inactive

The Navy has nearly 70 ships of all types, including submarines and destroyers, which are not in active service. Officials said a study is under way in the Office of Naval Operations as to whether these ships have such limited further use that they can be ruled surplus and sold.

Legislation passed by Congress in 1882 and 1883 governs the sale of warships, Admiral Woodson ruled. These acts empower the Secretary of the Navy to dispose of old ships by scrapping after they have been stricken from the Navy register, appraised, and a report made to Congress.

The laws give the President the right to dispose of ships stricken from the register by other methods, but officials say that under long custom, vessels are not placed in this category until they are unseaworthy.

Precedent in Sale to Greece

The act of August 29, 1916, the ruling declared, permits the sale of auxiliary ships which are 18 years old or more, and which the Secretary of the Navy "deems unsuited to present needs of the Navy." Such ships must be sold at not less than half their original price.

"In the event that it is desired to sell any naval vessel not covered by the general statutes described above," the ruling concludes, "special authority should be obtained from the Congress, following the precedent of the sale of our former battleships, U. S. S. Mississippi and U. S. S. Idaho, to the government of Greece, which was consummated under the special authority granted by the act of June 3, 1914."

Adm. Murfin Will Retire On May 1

Bloch Will Relieve Pacific Commander, 64, on April 13

The Navy announced yesterday the forthcoming retirement of Rear Admiral Orin G. Murfin, commandant of the Fourteenth Naval District, embracing naval bases in Hawaii and other mid-Pacific islands.

MURFIN

He will be succeeded by Rear Admiral Claude C. Bloch, who was relieved as commander in chief of the United States Fleet a month ago, after two years as ranking officer afloat.

Admiral Murfin, who was commander of the United States Asiatic Fleet during 1935 and 1936, will reach the statutory retirement age of 64 April 13, and must retire May 1. Admiral Bloch will take over the Hawaiian post some time in April.

Murfin, a native of Ohio, has served 47 years in the Navy. He attended the Naval Academy from 1893 to 1897 and served in the Spanish-American and World wars. He was in command of the American mine bases in Scotland in 1917-18, receiving the Distinguished Service Medal.

From 1931 to 1934 Admiral Murfin was judge advocate general of the Navy and served here earlier as assistant chief of the Bureau of Navigation.

BLOCH

Admiral Bloch, 61-year-old Kentuckian, participated in the battle of Santiago, in the Spanish-American War, and during the World War commanded the transport Plattsburg. He was commandant of the Navy Yard here in 1931-32, and previously commanded the naval powder factory at Indianhead, Md., and the proving ground at Dahlgren, Va.

He has been chief of the Bureau of Ordnance, naval budget officer and judge advocate general, here, and commanded the Battle Force, becoming fleet commander.

Wire Like a Corkscrew Thrust Into Artery, Saves a Life

Editor Who Inspired Kellogg Pact, Victim of Blood Clot in Abdomen, Rescued by New Surgical Technique

By the Associated Press

New York, Feb. 19.—A new technique of surgery, a fishing expedition through the arteries, probably has saved the life of Smith Reavis, editor and writer of the Associated Press, and the man who inspired the Kellogg-Briand Pact outlawing war.

Reavis' life was threatened last Saturday by a blood clot, or "saddle" thrombus, which had formed in the abdomen.

The clot lay at the point where the large artery descending from the heart to supply blood to the legs forks like an inverted Y to form two branches, one down each leg. A clot here is fatal, causing gangrene, unless quickly removed.

Occasionally surgeons have saved life in clots in various parts of the body by going directly in from the nearest point above to open the artery and lift out the obstruction.

But there is a new method, originated in Vienna, said to have been tried not more than two or three times in this country. It is fishing with a wire which enters some place else in the body and probes to the clot.

No instruments for such an operation were available at the Post Graduate Hospital here when Reavis entered. The position of the clot was determined clearly by the pulse, which was beating above the saddle and absent below.

In the emergency, the doctors fashioned their own instrument. They took a medium flexible metal wire and with pliers twisted one end in the form of a corkscrew.

After an anesthetic, they made an incision in the patient's leg into the femoral artery, one of the branches coming down from the saddle where the obstruction lay. They laid out the distance on this wire with mathematical accuracy, a distance which was to be a life line for Reavis.

They knew to a fraction of an inch the distance from the point of entry, up the artery to the saddle, for it is the same in 999 persons out of 1,000. They chose the regular distance for Reavis.

The wire was thrust slowly up the artery until it reached the measured distance. The measurements indicated, and the superior sense of touch in surgeons' fingers indicated that the corkscrew tip was in contact with the thrombis.

The latter is of gummy consistency. By sense of touch on the lower end of the wire and by measurements again, the surgeons made counted turns of the wire until the somemade corkscrew should be firmly set in the clot.

Then they pulled it out slowly and gently. All of it came out together.

Reavis is still not out of danger, but this is from complications before the operation, and not from the clot.

$270,000,000 Suit Filed Against RCA

District Stockholder Asks Funds Switched To Other Firms

By the Associated Press

New York, Feb. 19.—An action for recovery of more than $270,000,000 was filed in Federal court today against the Radio Corporation of America, Westinghouse Electric & Manufacturing Co., General Electric Co. and 24 officers and directors of the three concerns.

J. Webster Manning, holder of 1,000 shares of R. C. A. common stock filed the complaint, a derivative stockholders' suit, basing it on two alleged causes of action.

Ira A. Schiller, attorney for manning, said the plaintiff was a resident of Washington, D. C.

The first cause charged that, from 1919, the year of R. C. A.'s organization, until 1936, General Electric and Westinghouse controlled R. C. A voting stock and, as a result, the policy and the directors of R. C. A.

Manning asked for an accounting of 6,500 shares of R. C. A. common stock, worth $40 a share, which, it was alleged, R. C. A. gave to General Electric and Westinghouse in 1932 in return for certain rights to manufacture, sell and distribute radio apparatus controlled by General Electric and Westinghouse.

Claims Agreements Illegal

These agreements, the complaint charged, were illegal because the Government then was investigating the radio industry, and the assets and rights turned over to R. C. A. were worthless.

The complaint also charged that ratification by R. C. A. stockholders was obtained by fraudulent means and misleading information.

The second cause of action dealt with the lending to Radio-Keith-Orpheum Corporation of $11,600,000 for a ten-year, 6 per cent debenture issue in November, 1931. R. C. A. directors at that time, the complaint continued, knew that RKO was about to go into bankruptcy. The issue was an unsecured, secondary obligation, subject to a prior issue of $6,000,000, secured by all of RKO's assets, the complaint said.

Among the individual defendants named were Gen. James G. Harbord, Cornelius N. Bliss, Paul D. Cravath, John Hays Hammond, jr., David Sarnoff, Gerard Swope and Owen D. Young.

Other Suits Are Cited

From 1933 to 1939, the complaint charged, many actions similar to the present suit were brought, seeking identical relief, but were dropped before trial as the result of efforts of RCA directors.

The complaint charged that the directors were grossly negligent and that their acts constituted waste, mismanagement, misfeasance, malfeasance and fraud. It asked for an accounting and return to R. C. A. by General Electric and Westinghouse of all securities and monies.

Algic Among Ships On Which U. S. Calls for Bids

Bids to purchase three Government-owned vessels, including the strife-ridden Algic, were invited yesterday by the Maritime Commission. The ships have been under charter to the United States Lines but now are tied up by the Neutrality Act.

Besides the 8,727-ton Algic, the ships are the Pipestone County, 8,000 tons, and the West Imboden, 8,624 tons.

The Algic burst into headlines in September, 1937, when a 13,000-mile cruise to South America was complicated by murder and drowning and climaxed by a strike of its crew at Montevideo, Uruguay. As a result of the strike, 14 members of the crew were convicted of mutiny.

Epstein's 3-Ton Adam to Tour U. S. to Help Britain Buy Planes

By International News Service

New York, Feb. 19.—The three-ton statue of Adam by Jacob Epstein, which recently threw European art circles into bitter controversy, is en route to the United States for a transcontinental exhibition tour, it was announced tonight.

Covered by $85,000 insurance and under guard, the statue is on its way to the United States in an unnamed British ship which is under convoy, and which is expected to dock in New York this week.

With the statue are its owners, John Herbert and George Stafford, of London. They have arranged for exhibitions in New York, Washington, and seven other cities.

Receipts of the tour will be placed at the disposal of the British government for the purchase of American airplanes.

Exhibition of Epstein's conception of Adam evoked mingled cries of rapture and protest when it was unveiled in Leicester galleries in London last June.

The squat, 7-foot figure in pink alabaster took 15 months to produce, but newspapers thus far have dared to publish only profile views of it. One English art critic explained that "it will shock many because of the frank and uncompromising anatomical realism of its details."

To the uninitiated, Epstein's Adam loks like a huge, hairless, pink gorilla beating his chest, but the sculptor calls it his conception of "the fount of all mankind."

British art critics were completely at war over the sculpture.

The London Daily Telegraph wrote:

"It is a simian rendering of the human form, the boldest experiment in neo-barbarism that its creator has yet attempted."

Another critic wrote:

"It is a magnificent, forceful work."

But Hilda Marchant, writing in the London Daily Express, said:

"It will embarrass and horrify the average man and woman. Someone ought to pin a loin cloth around it!"

Grand Rapids, Mich., Feb. 19 (AP).—Returns of today's special election in Michigan's Fifth Congressional District tonight showed Bartel J. Jonkman, Grand Rapids Republican, elected to fill the unexpired term of the late Carl E. Mapes, Republican.

Tabulation of 165 of the district's 173 precincts gave Jonkman 23,507 votes and William R. McCaslin, Grand Rapids Democrat, 17,050.

The District has gone Republican ever since Mapes' initial election 28 years ago.

In 1938 Mapes polled 50,473 votes tot 34,991 for Tunis Johnson, Democrat.

Unprejudiced reports from Tokyo to the State Department represent Japan as approaching economic exhaustion as result of its war on China.

Dwindling of the Bank of Japan's gold reserves to $95,000,000, an acute food shortage in Korea, and a scarcity of coal and fuel oil forcing a recent shutdown of industry in Japan proper, are cited in the reports as symptoms of Nippon's worsening situation.

For verification of the reports and an appraisal of Japan's economic capacity to wage the war, Secretary of Commerce Hopkins has summoned home Frank Williams, for 27 years the commercial attache in Tokyo.

Williams has held numerous conferences with Commerce and State Department officials but declined to be interviewed yesterday. Officials indicated he will remain in Washington in an advisory capacity until Congress disposes of the Japanese embargo issue.

With respect to embargo measures, the department's Tokyo reports indicate a cut-off of American oil, copper, scrap iron and cotton exports to Japan within one year would bring economic disaster and probably force cancellation of Manchuria's projected development as an industrial empire.

The reports attribute the shrunken gold reserves to Japanese shipments of that metal to the United States. In anticipation of a possible embargo, Japan shipped here in January $38,000,000 in gold to increase its oil, scrap iron, copper and cotton reserves.

NLRB Inquiry Calls 3 in Cabinet

the committee last week when Chairman J. Warren Madden of the Labor Board was on the stand. At that time, it was brought out that the RFC and the Labor Board had entered into an agreement whereby the RFC might withhold loans from companies alleged by the board to hve violated the Wagner Act.

Federal Loan Administrator Jesse Jones, former RFC head, later explained that disbursement of RFC loans had in several cases been held up on advice from the NLRB or wage-hour administration that the prospective borrower had tangled with the law. But in all cases, Jones said, the delays were brief.

Testimony last week also showed that the Labor Board had endeavored to induce the Procurement Division to refrain from granting a contract to a firm against which a Wagner Act complaint had been issued. In two other cases, the board made the same request after the companies had been declared to have violated the law.

Madden said, however, that his letters to the Procurement Division in this respect were "completely ineffectual."

The Interior Department was also brought into the testimony when Madden said there had been some correspondence on a matter involving the lease of mineral lands to a company involved in labor difficulties.

During Madden's testimony, Edmund M. Toland, counsel for the committee, sugested that the Labor Board had been attempting to "blackjack" companies into compliance with the Wagner Act.

In answer to the subpenas issued against the Secretaries of Labor and Navy, Rear Admiral Ray Spear, chief of the Navy Bureau of Supplies and Accounts, and L. Metcalfe Walling, administrator of Labor's Division of Public Contracts, spoke yesterday to committee attorneys, and apparently obtained a "clean bill of health."

The subpoenas require the production of all memoranda and correspondence of the department or agency concerned on the subject of withholding Government contracts from alleged violators of the Wagner Act.

Evans' Resignation From FCA Believed Start of Shake-up

Counsel's Case First Development Under New Chief

FCA should be integrated within the Agriculture Department.

Forecasts were made at that time that the changed administration also indicated a new departure in FCA policy. Until Evans' resignation, however, there was no tangible evidence that a changed policy was contemplated.

A veteran of 13 years with the organization, Evans first entered the old Federal Farm Loan Bureau as assistant counsel in 1927. He progressed through various legal positions until he became general counsel of the FCA in 1935. He was active in framing the organization's policy and was closely associated with the work of the former FCA governors.

At the FCA yesterday it was widely believed that several other officers who, like Evans, held policy-making positions and had been close in their relationships to former Gov. Hill, would be asked to submit resignations.

Evans will be succeeded in the post of general counsel by Robert K. McConaughey, Gov. Black announced. Formerly head attorney in the Agricultural Adjustment Administration, McConaughey is now a special assistant to the Attorney General. A Dartmouth graduate, McConaughey received his law degree at Harvard. He practiced law in Dayton, Ohio, before entering the Federal service.

Evans' resignation is effective March 1. He will practice law here.

Great is the zeal and famous the reputation of Representative Engel (Republican), of Michigan, for making personal investigations of the agencies whose appropriations come under his consideration.

The other day he came across the name of a man still in his twenties who occupies a very righ legal post in a Federal department, and is paid a commensurate salary—as Government salaries go. Swelling with righteous wrath, Engel marched into the office of the young attorney.

The burden of his subsequent lecture to the luckless young man was that the occupation of important and high-paying jobs by young whippersnappers was something outrageous, and that steps would have to be taken.

To prove his point, he asked the attorney to relate his past experience. The young man replied that he had been second or third in his class at Harvard law school, and had served as secretary to Supreme Court Justices Cardoza and Frankfurter. He cited examples of his work, all distinguished.

Engels continued his lecture, but on a different tack.

"Young man," he said, "you have no business in the Government. A man like you could earn three times as much in private practice!"

Aurelius Battaglia is a local boy who made good in Hollywood. Advance announcements of Walt Disney's "Pinocchio" list him as story adapter, and other reports reveal that he has sky-rocketed from an apprentice to star cartoonist in the employ of the Mickey Mouse maestro.

A native of Washington, Battaglia formerly was employed in the now defunct Resettlement Administration, as an artist working on exhibits and publications. He received his training at the Corcoran Art Gallery here.

annual report of the comptroller general for the fiscal year 1930."

The G. A. O. assailed the proposal to set up a paid advisory council appointed by the Commissioners and suggested that the members be named by the President and serve without compensation.

"Such advisory councils are not unusual and may be considered to advantage when the members thereof are appointed by an authority other than that which they are to advise," the report stated.

"However, in the instant case it is provided that the members of such advisory council be appointed by the Commissioners, who also have power of removal, which provision would appear to defeat the purpose for which such council is intended by depriving it of independence in its actions, judgment and recommendations.

"Furthermore, it appears unusual for the members of such council to receive compensation since their duties should be considered civic in nature and free from any jurisdiction whatever by the officials whom they are required to advise."

The GAO report objected also to granting authority to the commissioners to create new departments or agencies.

"While no objection appears necessary to the provision that the commissioners have authority to abolish any department, bureau, or division or to consolidate such activities," the report stated, "it is believed that Congress alone should approve the creation of any new departments and the transfer of an appropriation between departments, bureaus, or divisions, such appropriations having been specifically provided by the Congress for such activities."

Striking at a provision in the Seal plan to limit the GAO control of District finances, Elliott cited the budget and accounting act and commented:

"It was thus the intention of the Congress that this office exercise the same degree of control over the finances of the District of Columbia as is exercised over regular departments and establishments of the Federal Government."

Maybe you're playing the other fellow's game

A GOOD many motorists put more attention on the used car they're selling than on the new car they buy.

That's "duck soup" for the dealer who mixes his pricing with mystery.

He'll let you set the figure on the trade-in anytime if you'll let him set the new-car price.

Why not? He has just as many digits as you have, and you're playing his game.

We General Motors dealers are staking our success with you on the values we offer—rather than on such "dickers."

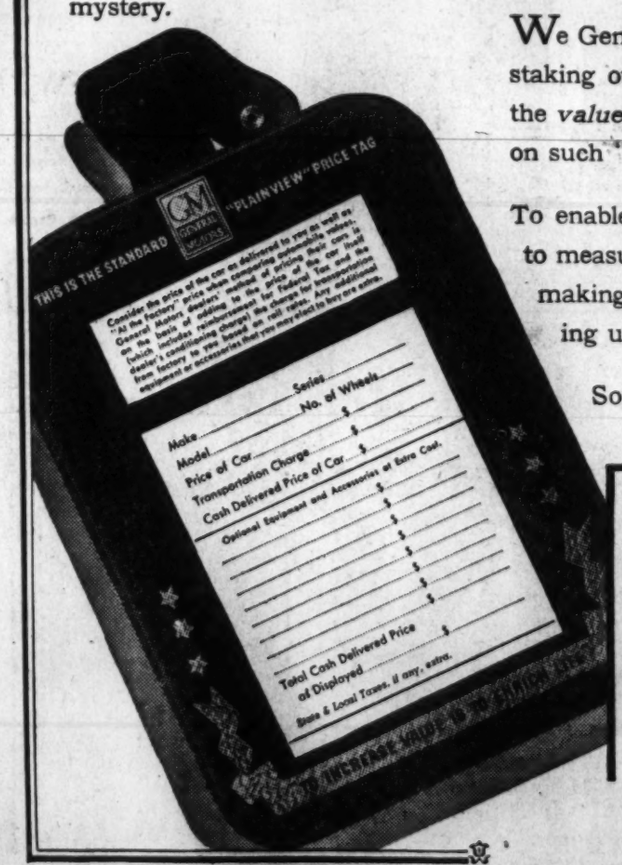
To enable you more completely to measure such values, we are making the details of our pricing unmistakably plain.

So that you may know exactly what makes up the difference between prices of cars delivered at the factory and prices of cars delivered here to you, we are marking every car on our showroom floors with the "plainview" price tag pictured here.

This tag shows every item that goes into our total delivered prices, and we display wall charts and supply itemized invoices giving you similar information.

If you like out-in-the-open dealing, come see our splendid new General Motors cars for 1940—easily the finest and ablest automobiles we've ever shown.

Examine their features. Check their quality, point by point. Then consider the price tag. Thus you appraise for yourself the value of these cars and you know what every penny of your money buys.



THIS IS THE STANDARD
GM GENERAL MOTORS
"PLAINVIEW" PRICE TAG
Consider the price of the car as delivered to you as well as the factory price when comparing automobiles. The General Motors dealers' method of pricing their cars is on the basis of adding to the price of their cars the dealer's conditioning charge, the price of Tax and the freight to you based on rail rates. Any additional equipment or accessories that you may elect to buy are extra.

No. of Wheels
Price of Car $

Optional Equipment and Accessories at Extra Cost

Total Cash Delivered Price as Displayed $
State & Local Taxes, if any, extra.

This is the standard price tag used by General Motors dealers to show what makes up the prices of new cars delivered to customers. "PRICE OF CAR" means the price we charge for the car itself, including reimbursement for Federal Tax and conditioning — "TRANSPORTATION CHARGE" means a charge for transportation from factory to you, based on rail rates — "OPTIONAL EQUIPMENT AND ACCESSORIES" means the charge for any extra equipment or accessories you elect to buy.

Post Feature Wins Praise In All Walks

'Our Town in Pictures' Lauded by Housewives, Parents, Officials

"its budget problems should be solved."

"I think it demonstrates the 'photogenic intelligence' of whoever edited the section," said Schmuck, who is in charge of pictorial display for the United States Public Health Service. "It's a swell job, just technically. I was unusually impressed with the excellent choice of pictures and their high quality."

Mrs. G. D. Bowen, of 2420 Fourteenth srteet northwest, looked into The Post to see what her two children learn at kindergarten. "It was really a surprise to me to see what the children are taught," she said. "People used to want to teach their children a lot of things at home before they went to school, but now they let the teachers do it. It seems like the teachers can do much more with them."

Mrs. D. M. Werheim, of 1230 B Street northeast, said, "Although there aren't any children in our household, the adults here certainly enjoyed knowing more about what children are doing nowadays in school and especially what is different from our own school days."

Mrs. Elfreda Tice, who also has no children, was "surprised at the way the school system has changed since I went to school. I was amazed at the subjects children learn nowadays, and the way they are taught," she said.

"I think every forward-looking and progressive citizen should be interested in education because it is the foundation of democracy," she went on. "I really think The Post is doing a wonderful work, and is to be highly commended." Mrs. Tice lives at 2138 California street northwest.

Some other comments follow:

Representative Sam Rayburn, House Majority Leader: "The Washington Post's presentation of 'Our Town in Pictures' is a most interesting feature. It catches the eye, holds the attention and teaches all of us important facts about what makes the wheels go around in the Nation's Capital. I shall look forward with interest to a continuation of the series."

Secretary of War Harry H. Woodring (father of three children): "I think the new section is a sensible and splendid way to point out to parents the system of education in the District of Columbia. Pictures tell the story completely and quickly to parents who might not have time to study lengthy and intensive articles on the subject."

Commissioner George E. Allen: "It was a very fine job—instructive and interesting. I enjoyed it very much and hope it will continue for a long time. The Post is always out in front."

Maj. Daniel Donovan, District Auditor: I think the new Post feature is excellent. I was greatly impressed and I'm sure your other readers appreciate this service."

Capt. H. C. Whitehurst, Director of Highways: "The first issue of The Post's new feature on Sunday was grand—a job very well done. It might well be extended to other local fields to make interesting reading for many months to come."

Justice James M. Morris, of the District Court: "I think the section is a splendid feature and I read it with a great deal of interest."

Stephen Cooper Manning, Forest Service aide and expert photographer: "The series promises to be most informative. I greatly enjoyed the first one and I shall look forward to reading the remainder of the articles with great pleasure. The photography seemed to me especially good."

Attorney Richard Tedrow: "I liked the section. I think it is a fine thing for a Washington newspaper to produce a feature like this, which tells the people of Washington about their city. The pictures are of a high order."

Mrs. Catherine Passero, of 902 Spring road northwest, who has three children in school, praised the section for "showing mothers and fathers what is actually going on in schools." She said "many of us don't get the opportunity to visit the schools." Of the project she said: "It's a marvelous idea!"

Mrs. J. W. McDaniel, 436 Ingraham street northwest: "I was interested in the picture section about the schools for two reasons. It showed how times have changed since my school days. And with my grandson in high school, of course I want to know more about what is going on in the system. I am already looking forward to the picture section about the high schools, because of him. This first section is fine."

Mrs. Leonard Nelson, 408 Crittenden street northwest: "Although my own children are grown up, I was very much interested in the picture section on the schools. It would have been a help to me if I had seen such a section when my children were small, just as it surely must be helpful to mothers of school children today. I was impressed with the fact that the children seemed thoroughly absorbed in what they are doing. It's a fine thing for The Post to get out this section."

Mrs. F. W. McNamee, 201 Willow avenue, Takoma Park, Md.: "The section is very interesting. It's so good that I've saved it, so I can study it more carefully."

Mrs. John Allan Dougherty, socially prominent and civic-minded matron, said: "Anything that can bring greater understanding between parents of school children and their teachers is worthwhile, and this new pictorial section would seem to do just that. My interest has always been with children of preschool age believing that if we can put them into school healthy, so that they can run, play and fight, the parent-teacher association can take them up there."

Mrs. Edward Everett (Dolly) Gann, 3508 Macomb street northwest: "Telling the story of Washington in pictures is an excellent idea. I found the section last Sunday particularly informative; and it seems to me such a feature would be followed with interest by everybody in the Capital."

A. E. Giegengack, Public Printer: "When I picked up The Post yesterday I was very much impressed with the "Our Town in Pictures" section generally, and especially with its typographical excellence. It was so well done, with such a nice arrangement of type and effective use of pictures. The method of display was a mark of good taste, the illustrations well chosen and the press work of a sort not generally expected in a newspaper."

Mrs. Robert H. Green, 3506 Thirty-fifth street northeast: "I found it very interesting to see the different things children do in school. I like the way it was presented very much. My own child goes to school in Takoma Park, but your picture section does help to see what the District schools are like."

House Committee Asks Hull To Take Stand on Finn Loan

By International News Service

Insistence that Secretary of State Hull take a definite stand for or against a loan to Finland was voiced last night by the House Banking Committee, considering a bill to increase the Export-Import Bank capital by $100,000,000.

The demand was issued by Acting Chairman Williams (Democrat), of Missouri, after Federal Loan Administrator Jesse H. Jones told the committee that if Russia won the undeclared war with Finland soon the loan might not be made.

Jones also said that if Russia declared war on Finland that only President Roosevelt could decide whether the proposed loan of $20,000,000 could be advanced the little republic. He reminded the committee that the Neutrality Act would make it mandatory upon the President to recognize a state of war if the Soviets formally declared against Finland.

Members of the committee, headed by Representative Wolcott (Republican), of Michigan, declared they were dissatisfied with the "equivocal" position taken by the State Department when the bill was being considered by Senate Foreign Relations and Banking committees.

Secretary Hull notified Williams that Green H. Hackworth, State Department legal expert, would appear before the committee tomorrow.

"Whether or not Finland gets additional money from this country depends to a substantial degree on her success in the field in the next few weeks," Jones told the committee. He said the Finns had remaining some of the original $10,000,000 in credit advanced by the Export-Import Bank for purchase of non-military goods in this country.

"You can't expect us to lend Finland $20,000,000 if she should suddenly be defeated before we made the loan," Jones said. "We would have to re-examine the situation. I think she should be given some money in any case. I'm sure she would get some if she were still fighting."

Jones said he had gone on the assumption that Finland would remain active against Russia. He reminded the committee that the real intent of the legislation was to increase the Export-Import Bank's capital to $200,000,000 for the purpose of "aiding American producers to sell their goods in foreign markets."

Senator McKellar (Democrat), of Tennessee, announced he would lead a fight for the severance of diplomatic relations with Russia by opposing an appropriation for the American Embassy in Moscow. The issue will be fought out in the Senate next week. The House previously rejected a similar move.

"No Time for Comedy"

Miss Cornell Shares Honors With Behrman

Hit of New York and the Road at Last Brings Star to Capital in Something Light, Though Provocative

By Gerald G. Gross

(Substituting for Nelson B. Bell)

"NO TIME FOR COMEDY." Katharine Cornell and the Playwrights Company present the play by S. N. Behrman in three acts, staged by Guthrie McClintic. Settings by Jo Mielziner, costumes by Valentina. At the National Theater.

—THE CAST—

Clementine ..... Gee Gee James
Linda Esterbruch, known on the stage as Linda Page ..... Katharine Cornell
Philo Smith ..... John Williams
Gai Esterbruch ..... Francis Lederer
Amanda Smith ..... Margalo Gillmore
Robert ..... Larry Fletcher
Makepeace Lovell ..... Tom Helmore

The pleasure of seeing Katharine Cornell once more in comedy is exceeded only by our happiness in reporting that her latest play is unmistakably worthy of the talents of its star and its author.

For "No Time for Comedy," granted that it is triangle and drawing room in its conception and trappings, succeeds so markedly in giving a novel slant to a theme dating back to Eden that one who comes to view a Cornell "vehicle" leaves the theater with the play, too, having made a distinct impression upon his consciousness.

By coincidence, "No Time for Comedy" is reminiscent of the last comedy in which Miss Cornell appeared. The reference is to "Candida," in which, it will be recalled, the substantial husband and callow youth compete for the love of a level-headed wife. In this instance, the quarry—to use a word which, somehow, seems positively the wrong one—is a bombastic playwright whom his wife, reasoning and dispassionate, is attempting to hold and whom the other woman is equally determined to steal.

The parallel is mentioned only because it is interesting, if without significance, to note that Miss Cornell returns to comedy in a play so much akin in its motivation to that which—until now—marked her latest appearance in a light piece.

All of which is not to indicate that Mr. Behrman's hit is all that "a light piece" connotes. It is gay and its humor, at times, is broad as well as subtle, yet it is much more serious than such a phrase as "a light piece" might suggest. Indeed, the author has not attempted to disguise the truly grave dilemma which he faces—whether to write comedy or, well, if not tragedy, then more solid stuff.

You have, in this welcome package of entertainment which opened last night to an enthusiastic and responsive audience, the case of an egotistical playwright vainly trying to convince himself that he is a born genius, the wife who would keep him down to earth (though she is only too painfully aware that hot air has a tendency to rise) and the "understanding" woman eager to develop latent possibilities.

Playwright Gai Esterbruch, successful fabricator of frothy pieces, wants to do something serious for a change, something in the somber mood of bombing planes and gas masks whose pictures plague him from the newspaper pages. Linda, the wife, appreciates the way he feels yet knows full well that her husband's literary strength lies in the opposite direction.

Amanda Smith, who lacks her rival's intellect and keen insight, relies on her skill as an indulgent attendant upon Gai's ego, leading him on with her meaningless encouragement that he has only now found himself—thanks to her—as a composer of serious things.

It is incumbent upon the eruptive Gai Esterbruch to choose not only between the types of play he shall write, hollow but amusing or depressing but profound, but his is also the responsibility of deciding between his women. Yet one decision will solve both problems, fused into a single dilemma. How he settles the issue—or does he?—is not being disclosed here in deference to your maximum enjoyment of "No Time for Comedy."

Miss Cornell, as Linda Esterbruch, is warm and sympathetic, for all the shrewdness and incisiveness which her characterization embodies. Her performance is played with a restraint which brings into the sharpest relief the character of the woman as it must have been conceived by Author Behrman.

The imminence of a deadline that will not be stayed prevents adequate consideration in this space of the support given by Francis Lederer as the playwright husband, childish and impetuous yet not without sense; Margalo Gillmore, cast as the designing though not altogether unlikable Amanda Smith; Tom Helmore, who would feign accept the hand which Lederer would—or thinks he would—yield; John Williams, as a very much done wrong by husband, and that rib-tickling minx, Gee Gee James, with her own brand of interpretation of a maid's part.

Suffice it to say that all are decidedly first rate and there will be more about them, and their play, anon.

The New Yorker

By Leonard Lyons

ALFRED SLOAN, HEAD of General Motors, loaned one of his company's best engineers to the WPA for work in Detroit . . . When Sloan was asked whether this move indicated that he was becoming a New Dealer he explained that it was motivated by the large income tax he pays . . . "The WPA," said Sloan, "is spending my money—and I want to see that I get my money's worth."

BEFORE THE SANTA BARBARA opening of "The Man Who Came to Dinner" a local newspaper published an interview with Moss Hart—an interview given while Woollcott and George Kaufman were present . . . The interviewer reported that Hart had confessed to interjecting only a few wisecracks in his collaborations with Kaufman and that George did most of the real writing. The reporter also quoted Hart as saying that next to playwrighting he was interested in painting—Italian primitives. "Mr. Hart," the report concluded, "is tall, dark and handsome" . . . The reporter was the victim of a practical joke. The man Woolcott and Kaufman had introduced as Moss Hart and the one who gave the Hart interview was a New York friend—a member of the Stock Exchange.

PHIL SILVERS, the 24-year-old burlesque comic who was signed by M-G-M after his appearance in "Yokel Boy," his first Broadway show, is in Hollywood now, caught in the complexities of the film industry . . . As his first assignment M-G-M tested this ex-Minsky veteran for the role of Reverend Collins in "Pride and Prejudice" . . . And the only Hollywood actor who offered him any advice concerning how to behave in Hollywood was Artie Shaw.

MICHEL MOK will be the new general representative for Billy Rose . . . Publishers in England, Denmark, Italy and Germany have asked for the rights to Erskine Caldwell's new novel, "Trouble in July." Because of its anti-lynching theme, Caldwell wrote it for American readers—and it hasn't even been shipped to any bookstore yet . . . The Rev. John H. Johnson, whose St. Martin's Church in Harlem was burned last year, will raise funds for a new altar and pews by a reception at the Rockland Palace, April 19. Duke Ellington will head the entertainment . . . Laurence Olivier and Vivien Leigh are staying, incognito, in Santa Barbara, rehearsing for their "Romeo and Juliet" tour.

IN "DuBARRY WAS A LADY," Benny Baker is Bert Lahr's understudy, and Betty Allen understudies Ethel Merman . . . Because they're not entirely familiar with the Lahr-Merman routines, Baker and Miss Allen were summoned to a rehearsal . . . They began to sing the hit-tune of the show, "Friendship," when Baker interrupted and told the bandleader: "Tell Betty that's not the first verse of 'Friendship' she's singing. She's wrong" . . . "Why don't you tell her yourself, about 'Friendship,'" the bandleader asked . . . "Because," Benny confessed, "we're not on speaking terms."

ALFRED LUNT and Lynn Fontaine are getting backing from a group of prominent industrialists, who will finance their good-will tour to Central and South America . . . Lunt, incidentally, stepped out of character at the last performance of "The Taming of the Shrew"—which was given for the benefit of the Finnish Relief Fund—and explained to the audience that he was suffering from laryngitis . . . He turned back to the stage, to face his startled actors—and then stepped out of character again. He coughed and told the audience: "Maybe it's the Soviet curse."

ELSA MAXWELL, who is returning to Hollywood, will play Tugboat Annie, the role originated by the late Marie Dressler . . . "What made you select Elsa for that role?" the Hollywood reporter asked a Fox producer. "Did you test her at all?" . . . "Of course," was the answer,"—by weighing her."

In Hollywood

With Hedda Hopper

Hollywood, Feb. 19.

We wonder if Orson Welles, who admits his inspiration for becoming a screen actor was the late Lon Chaney, knows that he prompted Lon Chaney, jr., to become a radio actor? During the lean days when young Lon was serving his movie apprenticeship in Westerns, and it looked as though being the son of a famous star would hinder, rather than help his career, Chaney decided he might stand a better chance of making a name in radio. So he began studying Welles' tricks, diction and timing. Before he had a chance to see how good he was, he got the role of Lennie in John Steinbeck's "Of Mice and Men," later flew to New York to appear in a radio adaptation of the same story.

HOPPER

"I was scared to death," he now admits, "but if I did go over, I owe it to Orson Welles. And if he feels he owes my father anything in the way of inspiration, I want him to know, the debt is well paid." . . .

When Johnny Weissmuller and the missus walked into Ciro's, first person they saw was Lupe Velez on the floor doing a fancy Conga. The swimming Johnnies stayed at the bar—they didn't care to dance.

Harpo Marx was strolling on the Fox lot. He was addressed by a director on the lot, "How do you do, Joe?" Harpo said, "Who do you think I am?" The director said, "I thought you were Joe Schenck." Harpo replied, "Well, if you'll believe that, you'll believe anything."

UCLA has had a course for some time called "Bride Training." They've just put a new title in the curriculum called "How to Make A Living," so Bob Hope wonders if they will be able to teach the bride how to support her groom as well as his father did.

For "The Ghost Breakers" they needed a raspy-voiced mug. Tom Dugan wanted the job, so went out in his back yard and yelled 'til he was hoarse. Yep, he got the job, now has to yell every morning to keep it.

Atlas Announces New Stage Bill

The Atlas Theater will present a varied stage festival next Sunday through Tuesday night, starring Casey, Hall and company, known as the Ambassadors of Good Will.

Another feature act will be the Stanley Brothers, comedy acrobats who have just returned from Australia. The three Byron Sisters, terpsichorean artists, swing out and dance their routine in solid jive fashion.

The double feature screen program is comprised of Greta Garbo and Melvyn Douglas in "Ninotchka" and the first District showing of Richard Cromwell in "The Village Barn."

Film Set Inspires Design for Ranch

An art director's wood and cardboard model of a prison set for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's "Strange Cargo," inspired Albert Dekker, who has one of the principle roles in the film, to use the same system before building a two-story ranch home near Encino.

As a result, he made a scale model of the proposed home from a cardboard carton, mounted it on plywood, showed it to his architect, and the two of them then worked out a rearrangement of floor space by shifting the cardboard walls.

Dekker will start construction within the next two weeks on an acre and a half not far from the ranch of Clark Gable, with whom he teams in the picture. Meanwhile, he has painted his house model, landscaped it with miniature trees which he bought at the five-and-ten-cent store, and given it to his baby daughter as a doll house.

Railroader Rooney

Mickey Rooney, in one day, had made scenes for "Young Tom Edison" in sets that represented the railroad stations of Port Huron, Mount Clemens, Fraser Smith's Creek and a flag station on the Grand Trunk Railroad.

GALA EVENT... The greatest celebration in the history of Port Huron, Mich. welcomed the first public showing of M-G-M's "Young Tom Edison" starring Mickey Rooney. The entire population of the city where Edison spent his boyhood participated in the tribute. ¶ The gala program of events was ushered in by the running of one of the original wood-burning trains, on which Edison worked as a boy, from Detroit to Port Huron. Making the trip on the old-fashioned train were one hundred and thirty invited guests, among them many nationally known personalities. The film was a phenomenal success of accuracy and entertainment.

"Young Tom Edison" will be shown next month in your city . . . to be followed sometime thereafter by another M-G-M picture dealing with the great inventor's life, "Edison the Man" starring Spencer Tracy.

Close-Ups and Long-Shots Of the Motion Picture Scene

Hollywood, Feb. 19 (INS).—Ever since "Goodbye Mr. Chips" was so enthusiastically received both in America and abroad, M-G-M has been looking for a movie to reunite Greer Garson and Robert Donat. Louis B. Mayer wasn't satisfied with an ordinary run-of-the-mill script for these two, who are up for academy awards, deserve something very special. I was talking with one of the M-G-M bosses and he told me that finally they have found what they consider a perfect story for Mr. and Mrs. Chips. "It is "Song of Love," the story of Robert and Klara Schumann.

LOUELLA PARSONS

Schumann was a famous composer and she a concert pianist. While she remained faithful to his music her love was really given to Johannes Brahms, the composer. Brahms will be played by Robert Taylor and it is M-G-M's idea to use the incidental music of Brahms, Liszt, Beethoven and all the great musicians who lived in that day

Snapshots of Hollywood collected at random: Greg Bautzer has been finding plenty of solace with Carol Gallagher, a very pretty girl about the same age as his former fiancee, Lana Turner; Mrs. Billy Wilkerson has been seriously ill with intestinal flu; Gloria Franklin, a really luscious looking brunette, at the Derby with Jackie Coogan; Robert Orr and his pretty wife, vacationing in southern California, are spending a few days at Palm Springs; Mike Frankovitch is in Cedars of Lebanon Hospital for a minor operation.

That's all for today. See you tomorrow!

Dutch Mass Hidden Guns Behind Dikes

Line After Line Of Small Forts Would Stall Invader

By Oscar Mohr

Copyright by New York Times

Amsterdam, Feb. 19.—"We are confident that should our country be attacked our arms will again insure the independence of the country, since these arms are strong in the hands of men determined to fight for freedom and who are united in their devotion to the House of Orange."

In these words, spoken with determination, Lieut. Gen. Baron Van Voorst, commander of the Netherlands territorial army, concluded a short address receiving neutral newspaper correspondents at his headquarters early this morning.

In a three-day tour the correspondents were shown the main points of a defense line by officers who could not conceal their pride in the troops' morale and the efficiency of the new military works.

Can't Stop Foe at Border

Dutch military experts plan to guard territorial waters with coastal artillery and small fast cutters and submarines with possibly some heavy artillery near the bigger ports. They could not seriously consider defending a border as long as that of France against a force of far superior numbers. The nature of the soil and the flatness of the terrain would moreover discourage any engineer at his first attempt in building a "Maginot Line."

The entire border is guarded with trenches and pillboxes, but this does not immobilize one-third or more of the entire army such as would be needed to fortify the entire length.

Frontier troops are there to give the alarm. In retiring they will destroy roads, bridges and dikes while any survivors will attempt to join the main forces behind the River Ijssel.

From that point the true national weapon—water—comes into its own. From the Ijssel mouth upstream along the Rhine, some miles down along the Waal and following the Nijmegen Canal southward, to the Maas River, the enemy faces natural obstacles, which, if duly supported by artillery and flooding, should break the speed of his attack.

Today casements on both sides of bridges are fully manned. Fast patrol boats guard the banks day and night. Roads approaching the bridges are partly blocked and can be barred within a few minutes by concrete blocks bristling with steel nails.

The Dutch believe in small fortifications distributed in great numbers along all possible lanes of invasion. Only a thorough bombardment necessitating much time and ammunition would be likely to clear a line sufficiently to enable the penetration by large forces over flooded areas.

Hundreds of Concealed Guns

Many hundreds of the newest heavy machine guns point their barrels through neat curtains skillfully painted on concrete walls of small bungalows near bridges or tank traps.

The Dutch continue building one defense line after another with a profusion of casements and barbed wire.

In all this defense the lines of the main rivers have been followed. Farther west another line runs roughly from Spakenburg to Khenen, where the now well-known Grebbe Line is nearing completion and in the Brabant Province where the swamps present an insuperable obstacle to motorized equipment. In this dreary moorland there are innumerable casemates.

The Grebbe Line is placed behind a wide flood area which is covered by heavy artillery hidden by hills some distance behind.

Since the entire area is parceled into small sections all surrounded by higher water, the engineers can "play with the flooding," changing the level at the rate of a meter a night.

"Nobody," said the officer, "will ever go to bed in a Dutch town and wake up in another country."

Nazis Confiscate Polish Farms And Factories

Berlin, Feb. 19 (AP).—Marshall Goering, Germany's economic dictator, today decreed confiscation of all factories, stores, farms and forest lands in former Polish territory now incorporated in the Reich.

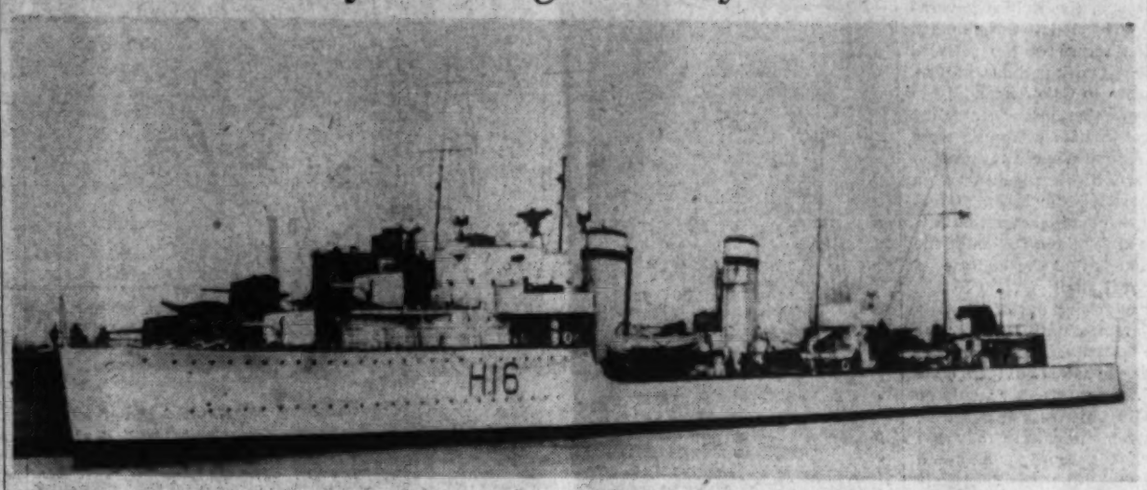
Five thousand agricultural laborers are being brought from Warsaw each day. Before many weeks elapse the Krakow area alone is expected to supply 120,000 Polish farmhands.

The order exempted only property owned by German nationals before September 1, when the German invasion o Poland started.

Such land and forests, including those "confiscated by the Reich's commissar for strengthening German nationality," are to be managed by the state "to guarantee national sustenance," Goering ordered.

Scores of thousands of farmhands are being brought to various parts of Germany from German-occupied Poland to till German soil, it was announced today.

British Destroyer Daring Sunk by German U-Boat



Associated Press WIREPHOTO

Sixth British destroyer sent to the bottom since the outbreak of the war is the Daring, of 1,375 tons displacement. This picture was made after her completion in 1932 as she left Southampton for sea trials. It was the first sinking conceded by the admiralty to be the result of a submarine attack agascar, Senegal, Syria and France to mention the Foreign Legion. It is an entire empire coming to the defense of France."

Along with the British troops at Suez and Palestine, Egypt's own rapidly growing army, and the hard-fighting Turks, this gives the Allies a great battle force of more than 1,000,000 men under arms and ready to be thrown into one of two directions if Germany attacks Rumania.

The first of these possible drives might be northward through Greece and Bulgaria. The second possibility would be to move through the Dardanelles and Black Sea to Constanta or the mouth of the Danube in a desperate effort to save the Rumanian oil fields from Germany.

To undertake successfully either of these operations the Allies must have the cooperation of Turkey. This is generally agreed probable, because Turkey would be blocked if Germany conquered Rumania and gained access to the Black Sea. Turkey would then have to face Germany, Bulgaria and the Soviets.

If Russia becomes Germany's military partner in the Near East, the armies under Gen. Weygand might attempt to drive through the Caucasus and cut the Soviet pipelines running from the oil fields at Baku on the Caspian Sea to Batum on the Black Sea.

This would not only cut off oil Germany has been getting from the Soviets but would destroy Russia's own principal supply. This, of course, would be possibly only if Turkey joined up with the Allies against Germany and the Soviets.

Everywhere in Syria I hear the highest praise of Gen. Weygand. As high commissioner of Syria in 1922, he brought peace and order to a country seething with unrest, but unfortunately he was recalled to France and serious troubles followed, resulting in the bombardment of Damascus.

Now all the races, religions and tribes dating from the pre-Christian era look up to him as a friend and strong chief.

"Weygand's here. He'll watch over us," people say.

I could not help comparing him with the other great soldiers I have met. He is barely 5 feet 6 inches tall and his 72 years rest lightly upon him. On the left breast of his well-worn tunic is a single row of service ribbons, although he has the right to wear 500 decorations. The yellow Medaille Militaire comes first. It is the priceless decoration France has given only to plain soldiers and army commanders.

Gen. Weygand's bright blue-gray eyes are wide set, warm and tolerant, but capable of turning to steel. He has a rather round face, lined with years of army service.

Soft-spoken, with an almost humorous turn to his voice, he is one of the two greatest soldiers of France chosen at a moment of gravest danger for the most difficult post.

When I said to him that his army is one of mystery and romance, he smiled and shook his head:

"We're not very mysterious, and certainly not romantic. We are preparing ourselves for a difficult unknown job. When the time comes we'll be ready."

But, I insist, this extraordinary army, brought from all corners of the far-flung French empire, is both romantic and mysterious. The whole country of Syria and Lebanon is flavored with the antiquity of historic struggles.

In the narrow strip of land between the sea and the mountains of Lebanon where King Solomon took great cedars to build the Temple of Jerusalem lies one of the major battlegrounds of history. Armies and empires have fought over this region for more than 3,000 years.

Now new armies prepare to fight new wars.

Altmark Crew Told to Yield, Skipper Says in Interview

By the Associated Press

New York, Feb. 19.—Capt. Heinrich Dau of the German prison ship Altmark, said in a radio interview in Stavanger, Norway, tonight that he had ordered his crew to offer no resistance to the British boarding party which freed more than 300 British seamen held captive on the vessel.

The German skipper in an international broadcast declared "we had no guns aboard the Altmark."

The veteran captain, former master of the liner Deutschland and twice decorated by his government during the World War, was interviewed by Mary Marvin Breckinridge, C. B. S. representative, after attending the burial of six Altmark crewmen killed in the raid.

"Respected Neutrality"

Capt. Dau said he was bound for Germany Friday night when three British planes flew overhead. He said that when a British destroyer appeared shortly afterward and signaled for him to turn away from shore he was only three-quarters of a mile from the Norwegian coast.

A party from the destroyer then boarded his ship, Capt. Dau said and added:

"I had given strict orders to my crew to offer no resistance.

"None of my men fired a single shot. I was determined to respect Norwegian neutrality at all costs."

Asked how his men were killed, he said:

"Some were killed while standing on the deck of the Altmark, some while they tried to escape over the ice, some while swimming in the water. Some were wounded after they had reached shore."

All Were Spee's Captives

He said all the captive seamen had been taken off British merchantmen sunk by the scuttled pocket battleship Graf Spee. The boarding party, he said, remained on the Altmark about an hour and a half.

Capt. Dau said he spoke no word to the English naval officers but that before leaving the Altmark some of the captives "took the time and opportunity to express thanks for the treatment they received."

"They had the same rations my own men had, and the same medical attention. Their quarters had been fitted up as well as possible under the circumstances."

Food and Fuel Ships

Joessing Fjord, Norway, Feb. 19 (U.P.).—An officer of the German ship Altmark admitted today for the first time that the vessel formerly was a fuel and food supply ship for units of the German navy operating in the South Atlantic.

The ship's fourth officer, Joachim Weichert, asserted he believed the British boarders shot and killed members of the German crew because they were highly nervous and feared the Germans would blow up the ship.

The steamer, a tanker of 12,600 tons, left Port Arthur, Tex., shortly before outbreak of the war with a cargo of oil destined for Germany.

During the voyage across the Atlantic war broke out and the Altmark received radio instructions from the German government to proceed to a rendezvous with units of the German fleet operating in the South Atlantic.

On the afternoon of February 16, he said, "the British destroyers Ivanhoe and Intrepid came alongside us, the latter trying to get between us and the coast and force us out into open water.

Describes Boarding Party

During the afternoon the Intrepid attempted to board us. We saw sailors wearing steel helmets and gas masks and carrying rifles, automatic revolvers and hand grenades waiting to board us.

"Capt. Dau then made into Joessing Fjord, whose mouth we then were passing."

"About 8 p. m. while in the middle of the fjord near the Norwegian torpedo boats the British warships turned their searchlights on us. Suddenly a warship (the Cossack) was noticed steaming slowly into the fjord.

"The British came alongside us astern and English sailors wearing gas masks and helmets and carrying automatic pistols jumped aboard us, stormed the bridge and held all the officers at the points of guns, ordering 'hands up.' The officers were all herded into the bridgehouse.

Nazis Unarmed, He Says

"While we were on the bridge we heard fearful noises of shooting on the ship and saw English sailors armed with automatic pistols shooting indiscriminately at members of our crew who were completely unarmed, since we had absolutely no weapons on board the Altmark.

"The British ordered us to lead them to the British prisoners on board. The sailors released the prisoners, taking them aboard the Cossack. Suddenly the British destroyers blew sirens, the Cossack cut off and steamed out to sea leaving the German crew aboard the Altmark."

Nazi Tension Eases

Berlin, Feb. 19 (AP)—Diplomatic tension between Germany and Norway eased decidedly tonight. There was evidence that foreign office correspondence was being dictated by kindlier hands.

Norway's indignation over the British invasion of her neutral waters was stressed by authorized sources in the foreign office.

Moreover, there was an appreciation of the fact that the small Norwegian warship accompanying the Altmark was no match for the British destroyer that engaged in hand-to-hand combat with the Altmark.

However, there was no lessening of official Nazi wrath toward Britain, whose act remained branded throughout the Reich as "piracy, murder and gangsterism." If anything, the anger of Germans flamed even higher when they heard that the British assert the Altmark fired the first shot.

"A criminal British lie," was the official comment.

of her wireless in territorial limits, and this was discontinued after Norwegian authorities told the captain of the infringement. He denied British assertions the Altmark had been searched at Bergen. The British have asserted the search was not thorough.

The entire Storting applauded the firm speech, in which Koht declared that "as far as possible Norway will defend her rights," but added that "Norway is a small state and cannot base her rights on power."

He declared that in any case world opinion would pass judgment on Britain's action and the fact that the Altmark was armed and had broadcast illegally did not justify the British disregard of Norway's rights as a neutral power.

Koht asserted that Lord Halifax, British foreign secretary, said there had been a "'technical infringement" of the Norwegian maritime area by the British, "but that he (Halifax) was of the opinion that this was of little value compared with the fact that the Altmark had between 300 and 400 prisoners on board under conditions which were not even worthy of a dog."

"It enlarges," he continued, "that the British government is of the opinion that it can neglect ordinary international law . . . The government cannot believe that the British government . . . will acknowledge that it is in open conflict with the principles which it has itself so many times proclaimed."

Altmark Remains Aground

Meanwhile, the Altmark remained hard aground in peaceful Gjessingfjord, tending her wounded and waiting for Norway's decision to intern or free her. Seven German sailors are known dead as a result of the fight with the British boarders from the destroyer Cossack.

Koht's statement that the Altmark was armed with antiaircraft guns answered much speculation on whether the prison ship was armed. Britain, in her protest to Norway and demand for internment of the Altmark, said she was armed, but Germany had denied that she carried guns.

The foreign minister said Norway did not know there were prisoners on board the Altmark. To the British minister's protest that this should have ben a reason for Norway to stop the ship, Koht siad:

"To this the answer was that the ship in any case had al rights to navigate through Norwegian territory. . . . There is no international rule at all forbidding a war power to transport prisoners through a neutral area, insofar as navigation itself is not illegal."

Finns Claim Soviet Division Destroyed After Month's Battle

smashing Finnish victory northeast of Lake Ladoga, where the Finns, using the same tactics they used at Suomussalmi, have annihilated another Soviet division.

The Finnish victory north of Lake Ladoga marks the end of a battle which has been in progress for a month and of which correspondents have learned little and sent less.

It dragged out all that time because the Finns could not afford to sacrifice men, and so had to nibble away at the division, isolate it by degrees, break it up, and mop up its remnants.

This division, the eighteenth, pushed in across the Karelian border at Uoma and got as far as Syskyjarvi, 25 miles inside Finnish territory. There the Finns interrupted its communications and kept it isolated, though to cover it, Soviet divisions tried to push in to support it.

With their dashing ski patrol tactics, darting in and out and appearing to be everywhere at once, although actually their total force was small, the Finns divided the Russians into separated groups until at one time there were 11 of these.

Use Tanks as Forts

The Russians dug themselves in and fought back at the Finns from burrows. They also used their tanks as stationary forts, burying many so that only the well armored gun turrets were exposed.

On February 4, the Finns succeeded in capturing the whole divisional staff, but endeavored to keep this secret. The Russians early ran out of food, but were kept alive by airplanes dropping supplies.

But, one by one, the separated detachments were wiped out. A group of as small as 80 men destroyed Soviet units of as many as 1,000 Russians. The Finnish capture of a strong point held in great force by the Russians, announced today, completed the destruction of the whole division—the killing or capture of 18,000 men and the taking of all its war material.

This division, the communique explains, had been largely reinforced before it was surrounded which accounts for its being in full strength.

Finns Shorten Front

In making their retirement on the isthmus, the Finns have considerably shortened their front. The lack of sufficient men to defend the whole isthmus against the terrific Soviet attacks forced the Finns to fall back.

Yesterday, according to tonight's communique, the Russians showed more activity than on the previous day and launched local attacks between the Vuoksi and the Finnish gulf. These were repulsed, said the communique, the Russians losing six tanks and men totaling the strength of a battalion. Southeast of Salmentaita, the Finns report dispersing a Russian column and taking three machine guns and some ammunition.

The total war booty captured from the whole Eighteenth Division is listed as more than 100 tanks, 58 field guns, 12 antitank guns, 76 motor vehicles, 23 tractors, some 44 field kitchens and 60 machine guns.

The full designation of the Russian unit was the Eighteenth Yaroslav Infantry Division. Among other war booty taken was a standard which portrayed a map with Yaroslav, a city northeast of Moscow, as its center. There extended from Yaroslav a bayonet through the Baltic States and Sweden, its point buried in southern Norway. This was interpreted as an indication of Soviet aggressive designs on the other northern states.

Hoover Points Way to Help Finns Get Arms

New York, Feb. 19. (AP).—The Finnish Relief Fund, headed by Herbert Hoover, announced a new service today which makes it possible for Americans to contribute to the military support of Finland.

Hoover said a "remittance division" had been established to transmit special donations to public institutions of Finland, including "the Finnish government for its own unrestricted use."

Other institutions to which specified donations may be made include: The Lotta Svaard, women's organization engaged in army hospitalization and civilian activities; religious bodies and educational institutions.

Another organization, Fighting Funds for Finland, transmits money to the Finnish government for use in any manner it desires. This agency is headed by Gen. John J. O'Ryan, a World War commander.

20 Poilus Die In Nazi Raid On West Front

By the Associated Press

Paris, Feb. 19.—German patrols on the Western Front attacked French lines for the third successive day today, but tonight's communique stated that a German detachment was repulsed with some losses west of the Saar.

Heavy cannonading rumbled along the extreme northern part of the Western Front as French batteries pounded the German town of Perl near the Luxembourg frontier, and military dispatches said the courthouse there, used to quarter Nazi troops, had been reduced to rubble.

Gustaf Rejects Finns' Aid Plea

Western powers, a risk which Sweden could not take.

Besides, he said, Finland can get more assistance from Sweden as a neutral than as a belligerent. The King's statement was an indorsement of the announcement by the government last Friday that it could not send the Swedish army to Finland.

"On my own initiative my cabinet met today to make this statement," the King proclaimed. "It is my wish to make clear for my Swedish people the responsible, severe position in which we now find ourselves.

"With admiration I have followed the heroic fight of Finland, our brother country, against superior numbers. From the beginning, Sweden, by volunteers and many other ways, tried to help Finland."

The monarch said that "from the first moment . . . I told Finland that they should not rely upon Swedish help in the form of military intervention."

If Sweden should become involved in war, then "it most likely would be absolutely impossible to give Finland the not inconsiderable assistance which Finland now gets from us and greatly needs, and which we also for the future are ready to give with warm hands," said King Gustaf.

"With the help of God," he said in conclusion, "I hope that we by our way can escape all the disasters of war."

Dream Of The Future

The dream of a large recreation center at the foot of East Capitol street has long been cherished in Washington. Thousands will be pleased to know that the National Capital Park and Planning Commission has approved this project. Not only would such a development near the shores of the Anacostia provide the city with facilities for major sports events; it would also tend to rejuvenate the long-neglected eastern section of the city.

For the present, however, it is obvious that this enticing vision of a great sports center must remain a dream of the future. No funds for the project are available, and if any surplus money can be found to the credit of the District it ought to be absorbed by far more urgent improvements.

District residents should not even be thinking in terms of a huge new recreational center when the city is desperately in need of more health centers, improvements at the Home for the Aged and Infirm and a general overhauling of its public welfare policies. Instead of authorizing additional units of this proposed sports center, Congress ought to divert the funds it has already appropriated for a National Guard Armory to more urgent civic requirements. It is a sad commentary upon the policies applied to the Capital City when public welfare institutions are left in shocking condition so that millions of dollars can be spent on projects of this kind.

Advice To Colleges

Competition may be the life of trade. But competition among institutions of higher learning for endowments and for student fees does not improve the quality of instruction or insure the financial stability of our educational system.

On the contrary, Dr. Walter A. Jessup, president of the Carnegie Foundation for the Advancement of Teaching, thinks that the competitive scramble for funds and enrollment has intensified the financial difficulties of some of our universities and colleges and brought about a lowering of their educational standards. "Many institutions," he says, "are offering courses which they cannot afford. Some institutions have been forced to cut the slice so thin that they simply cannot compete with their neighbors on any satisfactory basis, considered from either the standpoint of quality or the promise of an enduring future."

Dr. Jessup advises hard pressed institutions to pay more attention to undergraduate teaching and simplification of the curriculum. Only such courses should be provided, he says, as can be paid for out of college resources. This advice is not only sound from a business viewpoint; it is also based upon a sane conception of the essentials of education. It does not require huge amounts of expensive equipment or a bewildering diversification of courses to assure good results. The matter of prime importance is a "careful selection of staff, careful selection of student body, a budget that is balanced from the standpoint not only of the comptroller but of the student."

To the experienced educator these propositions doubtless appear to be self-evident. But to the harassed administrator trying to bridge a wide gap between the running costs of an educational plant and its income, Dr. Jessup's words offer scant encouragement. He has, however, called attention to a fundamental weakness that threatens to drag down our educational standards. That is the restless urge to expand regardless of the limitations of income.

With the administrative officials of our universities and colleges under constant pressure to cover deficits, the money-getter rather than the educator becomes the symbol of educational success and progress. And this increasing need for money naturally leads to the adoption of superficial, often meretricious devices for attracting financial support.

Gaudily expensive publicity, football, luxurious dormitories and imposing study halls, or "even ivy-clad walls," as Dr. Jessup rather caustically remarks, will not satisfy the student in the long run, especially if he has to assume a larger share of the cost of being educated. Unfortunately many of the institutions supplying the trappings of education instead of the real article deliberately make their appeal to young people who are not studious, and address their publicity to potential donors more likely to be impressed by what they see than by what is taught in classrooms.

The warnings of Dr. Jessup will probably have little effect upon the policies of institutions that have been built up and can be kept going only by this kind of publicity. But to those university and college authorities who are now fighting valiantly against such unsound trends, his advice will unquestionably be gratefully and enthusiastically received.

Housing In Danger

An interesting little volume entitled "New Homes for Old," sponsored by the Foreign Policy Association, reminds us that home building in Europe has virtually stopped because of the war. In the United States we are confronted by the question of whether the construction of low-cost dwellings to replace the slums will cease for other reasons.

Even in neutral European countries it is very difficult to carry out public housing programs because of rising prices, uncertainty and the preoccupation of governments with emergency problems. Fortunately, Europe had been building decent homes for the poor for a considerable number of years before the war broke out. Most countries of the Old World are far ahead of the United States in this respect.

Our problem is that of continuing the activities of the United States Housing Authority in a period when economy in the expenditure of public funds has become imperative. The public housing movement in this country has made only a good start. Funds that the USHA has lent or "earmarked" for lending will house no more than about 160,000 low-income families. William V. Reed and Elizabeth Ogg, authors of the F. P. A. pamphlet, estimate that 10,000,000 families are living in slums and that at least 4,500,000 of them will need help from the USHA to obtain satisfactory living quarters.

If the USHA program is permitted to go forward, many years will be required for it to approach the end of its task. So the need is for a long-range policy that can be carried out from year to year with improvement as to technique but no disruption of the steady attack upon the slums. The USHA already has requests from local housing authorities for additional loans totaling more than $1,000,000,000.

There are now hopeful indications that a substantial portion of this capital may be obtained from private investors if Congress is willing to do its part. Last week four local housing authorities obtained long-term loans, amounting in one case to 25 per cent of the capital needed. The law requires that cities supply at least 10 per cent of the investment in low-rent housing projects. But three cities have raised at least twice the amount necessary, and the interest rates they will pay on these loans over 26 or 27 years will be lower than the rate required by the housing act for 60-year Federal loans.

This increased reliance upon private capital will help to reduce the cost of housing slum dwellers and to relieve the demand for Government funds to be lent through the USHA. That agency has shown commendable enterprise in thus tapping our great reservoirs of idle capital for the constructive purpose of rehabilitating families that are ill-housed. At the same time it is attempting, with considerable success, to reduce the cost of the projects it finances and sponsors.

Undoubtedly these developments will strengthen the case for enactment of the bill extending the lending and borrowing powers of the USHA. But the large rent subsidies granted by that agency leave it in a vulnerable position. If the USHA had been as diligent in trimming exorbitant subsidies as it has been in finding new sources of capital, the housing movement in this country would be in much less danger of being submerged beneath the present economy wave.

Altmark Aftermath

The shrieking protests in the German press against the "criminal and lawless" behavior of the British seamen who forcibly boarded the Altmark in Norwegian territorial waters and removed from that vessel 326 British prisoners will arouse little sympathy in the outside world.

The Nazis come before the bar of world opinion in this matter with decidedly unclean hands. They have never shown the slightest hesitation in flouting neutral rights whenever it suited their interests to do so. They have never been held back by restraints of law or the dictates of decency and humanitarianism. Their present air of injured innocence will thus arouse only cynical retorts.

How weak is the Hitler government's case against Norway and Great Britain, the former for permitting the Altmark to be boarded, the latter for carrying out an act of force majeure in neutral waters, is made clear by the care which Dr. Goebbels' propaganda machine has taken to hide certain essential facts from the German people. Nothing is being said in the Nazi press or over the radio, for instance, regarding the presence on board the Altmark of the 326 British prisoners. And the vessel is described as an "innocent merchantman," although as recently as last June it was cited in the list issued by the International Union of Telegraphic and Wireless Communication at Berne as a warship.

In the meantime, the British government has flatly rejected the Norwegian demand for the return of the released prisoners of the Altmark and has, in turn, sent a strong note to Oslo demanding to know why Norwegian inspectors failed to discover that British prisoners were on board the Altmark while that vessel was being permitted to navigate through Norwegian territorial waters. Great Britain is also demanding that the Altmark be interned for the duration of the war on the grounds that she had served as a German naval auxiliary.

The difficulties arising out of the Altmark incident are anything but over for Norway. The Norwegian authorities must still decide what should be done with the vessel. To release her would be to accept the German thesis that she is, in reality, a merchantman. In that case the Oslo government would have to do a lot of explaining why the British prisoners on board were not discovered and released, as was done in the Flint case.

If, on the other hand, the Altmark is interned on the ground that she is an armed vessel, German rage against the Scandinavian kingdom is likely to reach greater heights than ever. The Norwegian government thus finds itself on the horns of a dilemma whose points grow steadily sharper.

Another Dictator

Three years of bloody war over the Chaco left deep scars in both Paraguay and Bolivia which may take decades to heal. Paraguay emerged from that struggle in possession of most of the disputed area but also with a bitter legacy of financial prostration, political confusion and social unrest.

It is hardly surprising, therefore, that in the four years which have elapsed since the Bolivian-Paraguayan fighting ended, two military revolutions have occurred. The first was in February, 1936, when an army junta overthrew President Eusebio Ayala and installed Col. Rafael Franco as provisional president. A year and a half later France was thrown out by means of the same device he had used to attain power—a military coup d'etat. Neither development, however, gave Paraguay more than a temporary period of stability.

Gen. Jose Felix Estigarribia, Chaco war hero and former Paraguayan Minister to the United States, who was elected President of the republic in April, 1939, in the first peaceful transfer of power in Paraguay in years, has also found the going very difficult. For all his good intentions, he has now decided to set himself up as a dictator with the promise that elections for a constituent assembly will be called just as soon as "anarchy" has been wiped out and the people show fitness to govern themselves.

However, the shift in Paraguay from "constitutional" to dictatorial government is more apparent than real. The Congress whose collective resignation left the way open to President Estigarribia's assumption of complete power consisted entirely of representatives of the Paraguayan President's own party. It was a rubber-stamp legislature whose disappearance will probably make little practical difference.

Behind the political anarchy which Gen. Estigarribia cites in justification for his coup d'etat is the economic and financial mess left by the Chaco war. Until this mess is cleaned up, and there is no assurance that the assumption of dictatorial power by the President will have that result, the situation in Paraguay will remain confused and turbulent.

A Mediation Board?

Senator Wagner has said he will introduce a bill providing for the creation of a United States Mediation Board to supplement the work of the National Labor Relations Board. It is virtually certain that the Labor Relations Act will be amended. Hence until it is known what activities will be assigned to the rehabilitated NLRB, Senator Wagner's mediation proposal should be held in abeyance.

The Conciliation Service of the Department of Labor has done excellent work with limited resources, and Senator Wagner has chosen wisely in making this service the basis for his proposed new set-up. He has also shown good judgment in making resort to the new mediatory service wholly voluntary, as is now the case. The provisions for compulsory mediation contained in the Railway Labor Act apply under conditions vastly different from those prevailing in industries which have no stable bargaining relationships and no broad voluntary agreements such as are found in the railway industry.

With larger appropriations the Conciliation Service could, of course, do more effective work than is possible with its present small staff. But it is an open question whether a new three-man board is needed to give "prestige" to the service. A superimposed agency of this sort would increase administrative costs and might hamper instead of assist the functioning of experienced mediators.

A good part of the effectiveness of the Conciliation Service, indeed, is attributable to the unobtrusive way in which conciliators have performed their work. If they are to continue to rely entirely upon persuasion to settle disputes, it seems doubtful whether legislation is required to put the mediation service "on a firmer statutory basis."

Neutrality Law

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The Allies may win the war, but on his showing to date Hitler appears to have the best of it. Finland's fall seems inevitable, and would also redound to his advantage.

France and Britain took up arms, not against an invader but to rid the world of Hitler's unceasing threats against all civilization. They fight for a cherished hope, not for an eternal basic principle. They have the heartfelt sympathy of all peaceful peoples, but they fight alone. It may be they will tire of the dreadful strain and open a parley with Hitler to end it all.

Even at this late date the United States could assure their victory, and without going to war ourselves, by speeding to them all the planes and other needed war supplies they need, for cash or credit. We should have done that from the beginning in our own best interests. Hitler has always insisted that peace was what he most desired, and the Allies can easily force our hand by a simple formula.

They have only to say to Hitler: Call off your dogs of war and we will do likewise. We will jointly agree upon a non-aggression pact for 25 years, you to respect the integrity of our African, Asiatic and Far Eastern dominions and island possessions. In return for your fulfillment of our desires in this respect, we will cede to you in perpetuity Bermuda, the Bahamas, British, French and Dutch Guiana, and all our West Indian possessions.

They wouldn't make such an agreement without first consulting us, but Congress has persistently tried to usurp the President's constitutional prerogative of directing our foreign policies during the past few years. Has it figured out the answer to that one? What would become of our Monroe Doctrine for which we have always avowed our willingness to fight, and for which we must fight?

It seems to me that both Congress and the President owe it to the country to tell us without delay that they have scrapped our idiotic neutrality law, and of the other steps they are taking to avoid the catastrophic stroke with which we may soon be faced.

November Elections

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: If the American people wish to keep out of war they should, through their representatives, prevent excessive appropriations for war. Nothing provokes war more than preparation for war on a huge scale.

In the opinion of many, the European conflict has but just begun. That it will be fought to a finish, no well-informed person doubts. Europe may pay little attention to Mr. Roosevelt's "peace" missions.

What our country needs at this time is wise and patriotic statesmanship. Unfortunately, politics, not statesmanship, is most in evidence. Present economic conditions are sufficient evidence of this. Enormous sums have been expended and yet there is little or no apparent improvement. The New Deal has failed in restoring the country to normal conditions.

The only hope for peace and prosperity within our borders is the success of the Republican Party in the November election. Facing a war crisis and an ever-increasing public debt, imposing greater and still greater burdens upon the business world and the taxpayers generally should cause the sane voter to pause and think. Has To Chuckle

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: After reading Walter Lippmann's column, as a member of the impertinent, disrespectful younger generation, I have to chuckle.

I met a modest, matter-of-fact, 16-year-old girl at the congress, a delegate from Missouri, who, I am sure, is doomed to go down to her sunset years—still immature in mind and character. She lives in the Middle West, land of abundance and opportunity, in her sharecropper father's cabin No. 4.

Her mother died from malnutrition when the baby was 10 days old and she has been keeping house for the family ever since, raising the child and working in the fields. She told me she was scared when she got up to make an address before thousands of people but that her family back home were counting on her to speak for them and thousands like them who have a right to clamor, and the louder and more impertinent the better, for land, peace and bread.

Why doesn't Walter stop thrashing about with the big words like Moscow and communism and admit that what he and the conservatives (older generation) deplore and bemoan is the fearlessness, forward-marching, clear-headedness and backbone of those young people who made up the congress. As one delegate expressed it, "I could stay home and warm my feet by the stove but I wouldn't be happy that way."

The NYA Cut

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I am quite concerned over the cut in the NYA. There are about 12,000,000 unemployed in this country, and one-third of the unemployed are youths between the ages of 15 and 25. Yes, 4,000,000 unemployed youth and very little chance of them getting jobs.

It is a well-known fact that democracy runs on the education of its citizens. Yet the National Youth Administration, whose main function is to help students get through school, is going to have its appropriations cut. Yes, 110,000 high school and 55,000 college students are going to lose their jobs. More disillusioned young people in the ranks of the unemployed.

Give the youth a chance for decent living, a decent education and a decent chance to serve their democracy. Don't cut NYA; increase it. OLGA WINSTEAD.

International Bridge

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Much Finnish finessing would be required to turn the trumps of Muscovite millions, and it is inevitable that Russian ruffing will soon take the tricks to set Gen. Mannerheim.

The brave Finns overbid their hand when they refused peacefully to rectify boundaries with the Soviets.

Where is the dummy in this deal? Not the Allies!

The kibitzers who furnished us with copious and multiplied communiques, postmarked "Helsinki," underestimate our intelligence—and I think they are right.

But let us stay out of this tournament. KNAVE OF HEARTS.

Training For Reserves

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: As a member of a veterans' organization and also a good American citizen, I would like to voice my objections to a regulation that is being promulgated at the Washington Navy Yard of the United States Navy.

First, I would like to state that I am not an employe of the yard nor am I a Government employe, but it runs against my grain when I hear of a foolish regulation being proposed as this one that prevents an employe of the Navy Yard from being a member of the National Guard or Reserve Units of the Army and Navy.

We of Washington are proud of our Reserve Units and every citizen should get up in arms when any move is made to hamper or reduce the efficiency and membership of our Guard Units.

There can be no just reason for such a regulation, for in time of war a man will be drafted to the service regardless of what department of the Government he may be employed in, provided he is within the age limit. So the fact that a man be in the Guard or Reserve Forces would have little affect on the personnel of the yard in time of war.

If these fine young men are willing to devote their nights out of the week to drill so that they may better serve their country in time of need they should be given every opportunity and boost, rather than a hindrance placed in their way.

This proposed regulation has almost the earmarks of a communistic plot to reduce the potential efficient fighting force of our country in time of stress.

In these times of unrest in the world it would be very noteworthy for all of our Government departments to encourage young men to train themselves so that if called upon to serve their country they will not be found wanting.

I hope that all good citizens will voice their oppositioun to this and any other such regulation that is proposed that would hinder our defense and reduce the personnel of our Reserve Forces.

At Last He's 21

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: In the hurly-burly of contemporary events it is quite possible that the public may lose sight of an occasion of no mean importance. Those who are familiar with the operas of Gilbert and Sullivan will need only a reference to "The Pirates of Penzance" to recall that this year Frederick comes of age.

Apprenticed to be a pirate instead of a pilot because of his nurse's deficiency in hearing, Frederick was bound to serve the pirate king until his one-and-twentieth birthday. Inasmuch as the unlucky young man was born on February 29 in leap year, his twenty-first birthday was, in 1879 when the opera was first produced, a long way off. On the last day of this month Frederick, the impeccable "Slave of Duty," will be legally discharged from his bond.

All this is very academic, however, for those who have seen this opera know that Frederick married Mabel and the two of them have been living irreproachable lives in Bloomsbury ever since. The pirate king is probably either a beefeater at the Tower or a Cook's guide for parties of Americans in Cornwall during peacetime. At any rate we can be assured that, whatever he does, there's "a touch of poetry in it." H. GIFFORD IRION.

The Post Impressionist

Those Middle Years

The office seekers are like the locusts of Egypt. President Polk is about to poke them back to their homes.—Thomas Lumpkin, March 11, 1845.

Any glance into the past confirms the view that Washington is just a play on a continuous stand. The actors die off, but the new ones go through the same lines and business. Even the wisecracks, as witness Mr. Lumpkin's, have the same quality year after year.

Thomas Lumpkin's letter which mentions the office seekers came to light in the effects of James Parke Corbin, of Moss's Neck, near Fredericksburg, Va., and is headed:

War Department,
Pension Office.

"My dear James," Mr. Lumpkin continues, "now that the thunder of the hundred big guns and smoke have, somewhat, cleared away, and the many thousands of men, women and children have returned to their quiet homes, and our city somewhat calmed, I shall compose myself and drop you some few hasty lines. You have, doubtless, kept your eye directed this way, and seen, from the newspapers, what has been done for the past week . . .

"The city has swarmed with myriads of people, of all nations, tongues, sexes and languages, and all sorts, and every sort, of amusement, fun and excitement have been the consequence. I must forbear (to describe the events) for I know not where to begin, and will call your attention for some faint idea of the great doings in this vast metropolis to the 'Weekly New York Herald' I shall mail today for you.

"The '$10' ball at which I attended, called the 'In's' ball, was certainly the most brilliant affair ever before gotten up (sic) in this great place for such affairs. (In a postscript he notes that the ball cleared "after all expenses $1,500 which is to be distributed to all the poor orphans of the city.") The 'Outs' ball at the Theater, was well gotten up and 'out' -numbered the 'In's,' because the 'Outs,' residents and foreign, in pursuit for official employment, and crumbs from the Public Crib, greatly outnumber the 'In's,' who are many of them, poor fellows, anxious about their places and wish all the 'Outs' at the D---l . . .

"In respect to removals it is the general impression that Mr. Polk and his Cabinet are opposed to indiscriminate turning out just for opinion sake. This has gained him many friends among the Whig Clerks, who were so very sanguine of the success of Mr. Clay, and who had actually marked every democrat for decapitation. Your humble etc. with all others . . .

"I have not yet paid my respects to the President, nor any of his Cabinet officers. I shall wait and seek a more favorable opportunity. I have the documents to insure me, I think, a better place . . . My employment and fidelity . . . ought I humbly think, to merit a better office, not to mention the sincerity of my fixed opinions about the Texas and Oregon questions and all, or nearly all, of the questions to which the Democratic Party advocate . . .

"Former President Tyler is now, doubtless, basking in the smiles of his former Presidential charms, and luxuriating in the 'Area of Freedom' on the banks of the James River. The grand climacteric, 'culminating point' of his greatness and labors, he saw accomplished and affixed the seal of his country to it, viz: the annexation of the 'Lone Star' and she is now to be one of the brightest gems in the galaxy of that Star Spangled banner. O'long may they remain united and happy!

"I was at his last banquet at the White House, and it eclipsed all pageants I ever before witnesseth (sic.) I accompanied the Hon. Mr. Lumpkin and ladies with Hon. Cave Johnson now P. M. Gen. etc . . .

"I sent Mrs. Corbin an invitation to our 'In's' ball. I hope she received it. I forwarded to her the March number of the Columbian Magazine. . . How will our friend Newton run? Can he be beaten?"

On this homely note Mr. Lumpkin ends his letter to Mr. Corbin, of Moss's Neck. He was a painfully exact writer, and it would be superfluous to point out the parallels between 1845 and 1940. If he kept a diary it would be a valuable document. Even if he had carried on an extensive correspondence with Mr. Corbin, one might write a book about it. But the little girl told us:

"We burned the others last winter, when we were cold."

"I don't blame them. I've been cold myself, hard by Moss's Neck.

Sees Nazi Pushing Us

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Once more the United States is well on its way to war. The Germans, the most foolish race since humans stopped swinging through trees, are, as usual, unable to let well enough alone.

We have told Europe that we want no part in its conflict, but Germany, in its usual imperialistic way insists that we enter the war against her, that any American ship that stops at a British port, even though towed there, may be torpedoed.

There is no reason that we should go to war with Germany. The craze to help England that existed in the first days of the war has been quieted by references to our self-interest and the seizure and censorship of American mail. While the Administration is still pro-British, there is an election in the immediate offing that will be decided on local issues, and might quite possibly be won by a strict isolationist. This would have the tendency to make our neutrality more positive and to stop all aid to either side.

Still Germany can't be content. They feel that they must force our sympathy to the Allied cause, that no matter how much we desire peace, it is only fair that we aid the Allies, that the Allies need our help, and that Germany is going to see that they get it. K. G.

Fair Enough

Not The Type

NOTHING could be further from my intention than to doubt the word of such men as John Kieran, the professional know-it-all of the radio and J. Otis Swift, who writes quiet things about the intimate affairs of little birds and squirrels. I just envy them, that is all.

Mr. Kieran knows the calls of all the birds, and when he goes out golfing he is always stopping and saying, "Well, double-breasted junco; it's early for them," or "Last week I discovered a nest of Carolina due-bills. You seldom see them this far north."

Do you happen to know that public park in St. Louis across the street from the hotel where the ball clubs used to stop? Sometimes in the mornings we would go around the first nine, and Mr. Kieran would lag back and pull one ear out a foot and stand still as a hydrant until from somewhere in the rough or in a clump of shrubs there would come a tiny little no-account creak. Then he would let his ear snap back and smile and say, "I will bet you don't know what that was."

And Will Murphy, or whoever, would say, "Come on and shoot. I love four to yonder."

HE knew the names of all the flowers, too, and even the weeds; and I have thought that if he were to grow an apostolic beard and hair down over his shoulders and pick out a bench in some park the sparrows and pigeons would come and pick birdseed out of his lips. Like that man in Paris, in that park across you know that street that runs past the Continental and the Meurice. The birds have to trust you. You have to have a certain way.

Mr. Swift is that way, too. I have never met Mr. Swift, but I have read his pieces, boy and man, back down the years, for years and years. You know what he does, even? He even watches weed-seeds to see what they do, in the dead of winter. Like the other day when he heard a male goldfinch exclaim, "per-chick-o-rie," as it tore some thistleheads to pieces, spilling some of the seeds on the snow. As he watched the wind roll them along until they dropped down a deep hole melted around the stem of a weed where the spring rains will hatch them into more thistles. Thus life goes on.

I HAVE never met him, but his son was cable editor on the night side of the U. P. back down the years, and the gift has skipped anyway one generation. Young Otis knew birds only by general classification, such as chickens, parrots, pigeons and little birds. The various weeds were just hay to him.

It would be different if I didn't care. But I have tried and tried.

A friend up the road had so many deer around eating his apples that he would heave rocks at them and yell, "Amscray, umsbay." And they would duck around the woodpile and come back for more apples. I even bought some store apples and a big lick of salt, but the apples got frozen and covered with snow, and the deer never paid any of this hospitality any mind. One day I saw some scarlet runners scratching around in the snow, so I got a streamlined fender and filled it up with the regular blue-plate special, including sunflower seed and the little kind that you feed canaries. There hasn't been a bird around since.

IF I WATCH a weed-seed it sulks You can go crazy watching weed-seeds.

Once I got a sheep. I got a female because they say the females are gentle and come arunning if you call them. But mine was a dog-killer. She would lower her head, her yellow eyes glaring, her lips curled back from her sharp fangs in a menacing snarl or creep out on an overhanging limb, lashing her tail until the dog was safe. She attacked people, too. I gave her to a farmer, and he shot her in self-defense, just as she was crouching to spring. Johnny Kieran or Mr. Swift probably would have made a house sheep out of her.

It was the same way about insects. I read how Mr. Fabre, with the aid of ordinary reading glasses and a little patience let himself into a whole miniature world of insect affairs, including nations, dictators and wars.

But all I saw was some ants and bugs chasing around like mad.

One day when I was stitting in the weeds peering through the glass, a little boy came over and watched me a minute. Then he said, "For God's sake." That was all he said. Then he walked away.

You have to be the type.

310,000 Insure Their 1940 Crops Of Winter Wheat

By the Associated Press

The Federal Crop Insurance Corporation reported yesterday that 310,000 producers had insured their 1940 winter wheat crops. The number of policyholders in 1939 was 107,000.

The corporation estimated that policies now being written for spring wheat producers would bring the total to nearly 400,000 compared with last year's total of 166,000.

The winter wheat farmers are assured a production of 87,520,000 bushels on a total insured area of 8,902,000 acres. For this protection they paid premiums amounting to 11,375,000 bushels of wheat. Virtually all the winter wheat policies insure producers 75 per cent of their normal yields.

The policies protect farmers against losses from drought, floods, hail, storms, freezes, insects or other natural causes.

Number of winter wheat policies and the estimated insured production by States include Maryland, 1,274 and 438,343.

"The Years Of Growth"

IN THE OLD, early days of Illinois "all men of any consequence bought land." The first-comers had hacked at the virgin forests and built themselves log huts; soon there grew up a town that was big because there was nothing bigger in the vicinity. The railroads came, Abe Lincoln underwent his apprenticeship to fame, the boys (and their fathers) marched to finish off the Rebs, cannier souls enriched themselves by fair means or foul, the town prospered and a wave of immigrants broke round its shops and mills. "The Years of Growth," by Harold Sinclair (Doubleday, $2.75), is an explosively intricate tale of such a prototypical American city.

There are fine things here, sharply drawn characters galore, villains and patriots, tumultuous scenes revealed in lightning detail, and the sum total tinctured with enough bitterness, blood and shame to reduce any realistic nostalgia for the past to zero. So crammed with material is it, in fact, that for a moment the reader wonders whether it will prove to be a sort of overstuffed carpetbag or crowded attic in which confusion rather than richness triumphs. Eventually the carefully planned arrangement of this work becomes apparent; history in the making streams by, the town of Everton stands out distinct — a budded twig on the great American tree which has been nourished by men and women as individual and as different as those displayed so frankly in this novel.

ODDLY, perhaps, the principal character here is not the hero, Blair Ransom is a perfectly normal fellow who had gone creditably through the Civil War, returned to marry a childhood sweetheart who suited him nicely but provided no rapture, and prospered with the growth of his fatherland. He even learned a certain amount as he passed into middle age in the fabulous '80's and '90's. But he was decidedly a dim figure compared with his father, while old John Ransom himself pales in comparison with venerable Jesse Fell, founder of the first coeducational state teachers' college west of the Alleghenies, mighty planter of trees, a true patriot and a Quaker.

Some of the most vivid figures play only a brief part. Especially appealing is Charley Radbourne, who, at the age of 17, discovers that his burning desire to make a baseball break and curve can, with infinite practice, be achieved. The little incident is given with seeming artlessness and telling effect. The tale of Dan Burke, master carpenter who makes fine violins in his spare time and perfects a varnish clear as water, is more tragic: the horrifying death of old Dr. Wheeler in a blazing buggy behind a runaway horse almost brushes the epic, as do, too, many episodes of the Civil War and particularly the one at the prison camp. And what would the historians of swing music not give to catch the echo of those tunes devised on the fancy-house piano by the mysterious, gin-sodden Jones?

THERE ARE occasional and pleasing hints both of Edgar Lee Masters (for this is an anthology of a district, though in prose) and of Dos Passos, where a culmulation of historic facts comes peppering off the page to revive the mood and foibles of a particular period or year. The gentler readers who like, substantially, a wreathed romance may wish that Blair Ransom had died in more romantic circumstances or, possibly, that he had not had a mistress at all. But even they must smile at the plight of the foreign prince who blows into town and stays to marry a local belle, and sigh over the sad, pretty tale of Marie Litta with the golden voice. For this novel is microcosmic, all-inclusive, full of sagacity as well as color and as American as turkeys or trailing arbutus.

House Votes to Let New Presidents Pass on Budget

By the Associated Press

The House passed and sent to the Senate yesterday a bill permitting new Presidents to pass on the budget for the first year of their terms.

The measure specifies that in inauguration years when Presidents do not succeed themselves the budget shall not be submitted until January 21—the day after inauguration—or not later than February 20. Under present law, budgets must be submitted January 3 in all years.

Representative Burdick (Republican), of South Dakota, at first objected to consideration of the measure but withdrew his objection after Representative Fish (Republican), of New York, offered this interpretation:

"This bill assures the new incoming Republican President the right to prepare his own budget."

Some Notes on War and Peace

1—Five Fallacies

IT IS inordinately difficult, I find, even to begin thinking about the peace that is to follow this war. There must be others who are laboring under the same difficulty. There must be others who, when they broach the problem, are as baffled as if in a dark jungle they had come face to face with an angry elephant, and were then told that it was their duty to tame the elephant.

How does one begin to tame an angry elephant? Does one climb a tree and from a safe height deliver an oration on the bad habits of elephants? Does one tickle the elephant's snout and offer him a handful of hay every time he gets really angry? Or would it perhaps be better to retire from his presence and take a course in elephant taming, a course which any really up-to-the-minute college would no doubt be glad to offer?

FOR MYSELF I do not know how to tame an elephant, or how to abolish war and establish perpetual peace. But for more than twenty years have been worrying about the peace that was signed at Versailles, and have been criticizing it and listening to plans for reconstructing it and going as a newspaper man to conferences which were revising it. The only thing I know for certain about the next peace is that I know no one who can sit down at his desk and devise a plan which will tell the survivors of this war just what they ought to do.

So it has dawned upon me that a more modest approach to this great question might at this time prove to be more useful, and that before beginning to think about the settlement of this war it might be better to think about how one thinks about the settlement of such a war. In this way one might eventually discover how to take hold of the problem, where and how to begin to think about such a problem.

I shall not start, therefore, with a set of principles for making peace, nor with a plan and a program, but with a summary of what I believe are fallacies into which we tend to fall when we think about making peace.

1. The Fallacy of Our Own Eventual Omnipotence.

WHEN we are under the spell of this fallacy, we imagine ourselves, sometimes crudely but more often subtly and unconsciously, as playing the part of the victorious masters of the world. We are Hitler in his dream castle, only we are still our own nobles selves. We draw frontiers on maps. We make combinations of people. We dispose grandly and easily of the lives, the fortunes, the wishes and the prejudices of mankind. The underlying assumption is that we are in a position to impose upon mankind the constitution which we have decided is good for them.

This is, however, sheer fantasy —in Hitler's case a lunatic fantasy, in our own case perhaps only an amiable daydream. For nobody in all history, not Alexander, Caesar, or Napoleon, not the Congress of Vienna or the Peace Conference at Paris, has ever remotely approached omnipotence of this order. It is, therefore, a fundamental error to think about peace on the assumption, however concealed that some one, or even some one group of men, is going to arrange the world according to his heart's desire; and that this some one, or one of the some ones, is one's self.

2. The Belief in the Miracle of Universal Consent.

MANY attractive schemes, of which the Kellogg Pact to Outlaw War is a classic example, are based on the assumption that all men will not only acknowledge the same principles of conduct (which is just conceivable) but that all men will draw the same practical conclusions from the principles. This is not, I think, conceivable — even theoretically; in practical affairs to act as if it were possible is to ignore the problem of war and peace and then to call this ignorance a solution.

For the problem is not how men should act if they were all in fundamental agreement; if they were in fundamental agreement, there would be no problem and, therefore, no need of a solution. The problem is how to obtain more agreement than there is, and how to get on without wrecking our civilization by the conflicts which arise out of disagreement. Yet there are an astonishing number of fine plans in circulation today which tacitly assume that the plan is so attractive that the whole competing and fighting world will find it too rational, too just, and too inspiring to reject.

3. The Fallacy of the Exaggerated and Isolated Cause.

IN THIS category are to be found all the plans which isolate some one issue as the "fundamental" and "underlying" cause of the whole disorder. There are innumerable cults, each with its separate diagnosis: the cause we are told is lack of raw materials, or lack of living space, or lack of colonies, or lack of national self-determination.

When this fallacy is disinterested, it arises from intellectual specialization: we all like to think that the most important things in the world are the things we know about the world. When this fallacy is not disinterested, as is often the case, it is a device of the propagandist.

4. The Fallacy of Overvaluing Our Good Intentions.

THE PROBLEM of war and peace has baffled the greatest minds for more than two thousand years; we must not, therefore, imagine that to hate war and desire peace, however passionately, is a qualification for solving the problem. Thus we all desire good health, except the morbid minority who enjoy their bad health. But our desire to be healthy does not make us competent physicians; and if the desire becomes a preoccupation, we are hypochondriacs, sick with the fear of being sick, or faddists who favor a new diet and a new nostrum and a new expensive quack every third week.

Peace is as desirable, and just about as indefinable and elusive, as good health. And war is as undesirable as a bad disease, but there are many kinds and causes of war, as there are many kinds of disease. No disease is curable by thinking how horrible it is, nor is a robust constitution achieved by wishing for it. We may enjoy peace as we enjoy good health without knowing why, which is largely the case of the United States; or we may have bad health, like the wars of Europe and Asia, without knowing which pill, if any, will cure it.

BUT THERE is one fallacy which is even more confusing than any of these: It is

5. The Fallacy of Not Understanding that the Character of the Peace Is Shaped by the Course of the War.

There are many who think that the settlement is made by the diplomats who write the peace treaty. During a war this error provides an agreeable escape from its grim realities. For when we accept this error we feel that we can think about "the peace," ignoring the deplorable war which precedes it. This is, I think, the great popular illusion both about the Versailles settlement of 1919 and about what is to be the settlement which ends this war.

To get rid of this illusion is perhaps to begin to begin to prepare to think about peace.

American U. to Debate Swarthmore Today

An American University debate team will argue with a Swarthmore College team at 1:30 p. m. today in Hurst Hall at the university. William Adams and James Hewitt will represent American U. on the question of whether the United States should be politically and economically isolated from Europe's belligerents. There will be an audience discussion.

The American University debate teams, comprised of Edgar Keller, Addison Clay, Hector Sherertz and Walter Barkdull, won first place last Saturday in a tournament at Shippensburg, Pa., at which nine other schools competed.

Life's Darkest Moment

Problem Of Debt

By Mark Sullivan

Mr. Roosevelt's Views

RECENTLY there has been contention, between President Roosevelt and Mr. Dewey, and between Mr. Roosevelt and newspaper men, over something Mr. Roosevelt, at a press conference, said about debt. The subject goes far deeper than these superficial splutterings of argument. It has a powerful bearing on our future national existence. It may determine what kind of future society and government this country is to have. Decidedly it calls for understanding. For light about it, go back to the beginning.

The depression came in 1929. Mr. Hoover was President. During the last two years of his term he increased the national debt some three billion dollars.

Then, in 1932, Mr. Roosevelt was nominated for President. He took, as his principal campaign theme, the increase of debt. He condemned the increase. He attacked Mr. Hoover.

"I accuse the present (Hoover) Administration of being the greatest spending Administration in all our history."

OVER AND OVER, Mr. Roosevelt repeated that charge. For himself he said: "It is my pledge and promise that rigid governmental economy shall be enforced by a stern and unremitting government policy of living within our income." Ringingly he cried, "Stop the deficits!" There was never more eloquently earnest denunciation of deficits, of Government debt, of unbalanced budgets, than Mr. Roosevelt's solemn excoriations during his 1932 campaign.

Mr. Roosevelt was elected. He proceeded to practice economy, vigorously and successfully. He put in effect the most drastic economies ever attempted by any Administration; he actually reduced Government salaries and wages, including salaries of Congressmen; he reduced or wiped out benefits to veterans.

But after about three months Mr. Roosevelt abandoned economy. Ultimately all the cuts he had made were restored. He adopted, instead of economy, a policy of great Government borrowing and spending.

At the same time he kept up the expectation of balancing the budget. This expectation, we must assume, was sincere. Whoever persuaded him to the policy of borrowing and spending, persuaded him also that by this policy a balanced budget would be achieved. They called the spending "pump-priming." The theory was that the spending would create so much prosperity that it would yield enough taxes to pay the Government's expenses.

IN THIS belief Mr. Roosevelt, year after year for six years, hoped and held out, in his messages to Congress, the expectation that the budget would be balanced the following year, or at most the year after. Yet year after year the budget was not balanced. Year after year the national debt went to new heights.

Finally came 1939, last year. It was plain to everyone, even to one so optimistic as Mr. Roosevelt, that the budget would not be balanced. He would come to the end of his second term with the unprecedented record of eight years of deficits. In the mood created by this realization, Mr. Roosevelt made his address to Congress January 4, 1939.

That mesage last year, to anyone who grasped such matters, was startling, and seriously disquieting. Instead of deploring the debt, Mr. Roosevelt now justifies it. He invented a new term. What he had previously condemned as "Government spending," he now called, and praised as, "Government investing." It can be said quite confidently that that term had never appeared in any previous message to Congress by Mr. Roosevelt or any other President.

Again, and most disturbingly, Mr. Roosevelt said:

"Many people have the idea that as a nation we are overburdened with debt and are spending more than we can afford. That is not so. Despite our Federal Government expenditures, the entire debt of our national economic system, public and private together, is no larger than it was in 1929."

IN THAT, the significant words are, "public and private together."

To compare public debt with private debt, to add the two together as one, is something Mr. Roosevelt had never done before. His implication was that increase of public debt is all right—if it is accompanied by decrease of private debt. To see the significance of that, follow it to a logical conclusion. Imagine the public debt going up and up, while private debt goes down to nothing. A country in which there is no private debt, would be a country in which there is no private business. It would be socialism, or what have you. It would result in what Mr. Roosevelt, during his brief period of economy in 1933, said would be the result of continued increase in public debt: "Too often in recent history, liberal governments have been wrecked on the rocks of loose fiscal policy."

It is most doubtful if Mr. Roosevelt personally invented these verbal devices for justifying debt. Almost certainly they were presented to him by some of his New Deal associaties, someone who believes in continued and indefinite increase of the public debt.

Whoever presented him with those devices in 1939, still has access to his mind. For the recent statement of his, that gave rise to argument between him and Mr. Dewey and others, was a precise repetition of the device of justifying public debt by showing decrease of private debt.

The Trade Agreements

By Joseph H. Baird

Mr. Hull Faces A Fight

Special Correspondence Of The Post

FOR THE second time since the Administration's reciprocal trade agreement program was begun in 1934, Secretary of State Cordell Hull and his associates in the Department of State are now engaged in a legislative battle for extension of the Congressional grant of power under which their assault on trade barriers and commercial restrictions has been carried out.

Without doubt Mr. Hull regards this program, under which 19 trade-promoting and tariff-slashing agreements now are operating, as the cornerstone of his career as Secretary of State. And the Department of State is mobilizing every possible argument to convince Congress that the economic welfare of the United States —so far as it is affected by its foreign trade—demands an extension of the Administration's power to make more of these agreements over the next three years.

CORDELL HULL
Department of Commerce figures, says Joseph H. Baird, bear out his contentions regarding the value of the trade pacts

The House Ways and Means Committee has issued a favorable report to the House. However, opponents of the Hull program are counting on the attack the extension bill will receive in the current House debate. It will again be subject to attack in the Senate.

Therefore, friends of the reciprocal trade program are acclaiming a current Commerce Department study of its effects, which offers some of the strongest arguments ever advanced for it.

MANY previous studies have shown that there has been a general rise in United States export trade since the beginning of the Hull program in 1934. Opponents of the Administration's reciprocal treaties, however, have argued, and with some logic, that this growth of exports could not justly be credited to the Hull agreements, but was merely a reflection of generally improving world business conditions since the trough of the depression in 1932-33.

The latest Commerce Department study is unprecedentedly significant, however, in that it shows a rise in the value of American exports last year to the 18 countries with which the new trade treaties were operating, in comparison with the preceding year, while this country's sales to the world in general were registering a decline. (The study is based on the first 11 months of 1939 and similar periods in previous years are taken for comparison. According to the Commerce Department, the December figures, completing the year, are not likely to change any conclusions based on the 11-month study.)

In terms of actual figures, the Commerce Department found that for the first 11 months of 1939 exports to the 18 countries with which trade agreements were in effect for the whole time totaled $1,695,000,000, as compared with $1,615,000,000 for the corresponding months in 1938. The net increase in our sales to these countries was $80,000,000, or a rise of 4.9 per cent.

FOR THE SAME period, exports to the rest of the world not included in the "agreements bloc" totaled $1,114,000,000, as compared with $1,210,000,000 in the first 11 months of 1938, or a decrease of 7.9 per cent

For the world as a whole—both agreement and nonagreement countries—American exports declined by $16,000,000, or 0.6 per cent, during the two periods under study.

The conclusion to be drawn seems inescapable: The American exporter has profited more in the nations with whom we have concluded trade treaties than in those with whom we have not.

THOSE who have attacked the trade agreement program on the ground that, whatever it may do for American exporters, it injures the home market for the American farmer and manufacturer, will seize on the import section of the Commerce Department's study to bulwark their argument. For it does show that our purchases from the trade-agreement group of countries in 1939 amounted to $1,241,000,000, or an increase of $185,000,000, or 17.5 per cent, over the previous year. More, the study shows that these imports were greater absolutely, as was their gain over the previous year, than those from the non-agreement countries, from which we imported commodities valued at $830,000,000, or $97,000,000 (13.2 per cent) more than in 1938.

However, the study points out: "In considering these increases, due account must, of course, be taken of the exceptionally low level of 1938 imports, which showed a decline of $1,123,000,000 in comparison with 1937, and a decline of $462,000,000 in comparison with 1936. The expansion of $282,000,000 in total imports from January to November, 1939, may therefore be characterized as a return to a more normal volume."

In other words, the increase in imports in 1939 was the natural result of improved business conditions and purchasing power here as compared with 1938.

That the increase in imports from countries with whom we have trade agreements was larger than from those in the nonagreement group very probably is due in part to the treaties. It is unlikely that the State Department would deny that. For the whole essence of the Hull theory lies in the word "reciprocal." It was planned that foreign nations granting the United States easier access to their markets should enjoy a better market here. And, again, from the viewpoint of healthy monetary exchange, a profitable long range American export trade can be maintained only with nations which sell enough here to provide at least a large part of the dollar exchange to pay for the goods they buy.

IT IS a natural supposition that a large part of the growth of exports during 1939 was due to preparations for and the final outbreak of the European war—that goods sent abroad were mostly in the category of war supplies. Three of the major combatants—Great Britain, France and Canada—are within the trade treaty group, although Germany, and Japan, fighting its long Chinese war, are not.

Close examination of the exports to trade-treaty nations, however, shows that an increase in sales of some categories of war materials in 1939 as compared to 1938 was almost entirely offset by a decline in other categories. Hence it seems that the demand for war materials had little to do with the general rise.

For purposes of the study, the Commerce Department takes the popular conception of war supplies — aircraft, machine tools, metals, petroleum products, cotton, wheat and corn.

DURING the 1938-39 comparative period exports of airplanes increased by a large sum—$25,486,000—as did foreign sales of metal-working machinery—$12,707,000. Great Britain and France were largely responsible for these increases.

Despite war preparations, however, there was a falling off in exports of petroleum and its products. Cotton registered a decline of $9,819,000, and exports of wheat and corn, compared to the first 11 months of 1938, decreased by $38,861,000 and $76,064,000 respectively. The loss in the value of exports of these two commodities alone was $10,000,000 more than the combined increase in the value of exports of aircraft, machine tools, iron and steel, and aluminum.

A large part of the imports which accounted for the rise in 1939, be it noted, were unprocessed raw materials which are not produced here, or are produced in insufficient quantities for the American market. Among these were an increase to the value of $34,490,000 in crude rubber, of $27,148,000 in raw silk, of $12,462,000 in nickel and $16,994,000 in tin.

ONLY a bold prophet would attempt to foretell the course of American foreign trade if the wars in Europe and the Far East continue and, as they are likely to do, result in a constantly increasing demand for supplies of military materials and foodstuffs, but, at the same time, disorganize the normal channels of commerce.

However, Mr. Hull and his colleagues, using the Commerce Department study, can make a strong case for their contention that over the last five years the trade treaty program has resulted in a long-term acceleration of America's trade with the world. Nor, regardless of future political conditions, is it possible to see how the program, which has as its basic purpose the lowering of tariff walls and the unclogging of trade channels, can do anything to deter the flow of any kind of commerce, even the abnormal type that derives from war.

Gas Kills Mother; Explosion Splits House As Rescue Workers Bring Aid to Daughters

VOLUNTEER FIREMEN late yesterday were still pouring water against the smouldering ruins of the two-story Ridgeway house in Savage, Md., where one person, a 69-year-old widow, died of asphyxiation early in the morning and 13 persons were injured in a subsequent blast that rent the house in two.

The townspeople stood around, considering the night of horror as the fire burned out in the dwelling.

Monday night, gas began seeping into the house and killed Mrs. Thomas Ridgeway, the widow, who was sleeping on the first floor.

Asleep on the second floor were her daughters, Miss Catherine Ridgeway, 26, and Mrs. Helen Linder, 33. Awakened at 2 a. m., by the odor of gas, Mrs. Linder tried unsuccessfully to awaken her sister and mother. Then she telephoned Dr. Frank Shipley. Before completing a second call to her husband, Richard E. Linder, 44, proprietor of a nearby tavern, she fell, overcome. The physician crashed in the locked door.

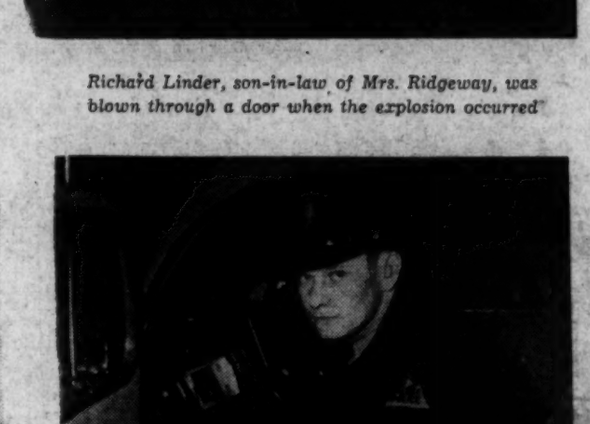
Glen Burnie and Savage rescue squads responded. Repairmen came from the Consolidated Gas & Electric Co. in Baltimore. They went to the basement and opened a door, leading to the gas meter. As the door swung apart, a great blast ripped the house in half. One of the repairmen was blown through a trapdoor leading onto the side lawn. Mr. Linder, who had just arrived, was hurled through a glass door and a screen door at front of the house. Dr. Shipley, who had tried to revive Mrs. Ridgeway and was at work over the two daughters, was blown out behind Mr. Linder. He sprang back to his work of mercy.

Herbert Ridgeway, 36, a son of the dead widow (who had come with other friends and relatives at the house), and Mrs. Emory Swann, sister of Dr. Shipley, were blown through a back door. Mr. and Mrs. Monroe Collisen, son-in-law and daughter of Mrs. Ridgeway, and Mrs. Effie Hackley, 42, Mrs. Ridgeway's daughter, were hurled to the floor. All the while, the flames mounted.

Mrs. Linder and Miss Ridgeway were taken from the burning house by Collisen and Hackley. They are at St. Agnes Hospital, Baltimore, where their condition was listed as favorable. Dr. Shipley was cut and bruised. Richard Linder suffered cuts. Charles Lecallett, 25, and Arthur Sweeney, 47, of Baltimore, the gas company employes, suffered first and second-degree burns. The Collisens, Mrs. Hackley, Louis Hackley, 22, her son; Herbert Ridgeway, and Mrs. Swann suffered shock.

Maryland State Policeman W. M. Bohler arrived early at the scene and was attempting to help the injured from the house when the explosion blew him into the yard. He was shaken up, but resumed his duty.

All that remains of the home of Mrs. Thomas Ridgeway, 69, who was killed in the blast that shattered the dwelling yesterday at Savage, Md.



Richard Linder, son-in-law of Mrs. Ridgeway, was blown through a door when the explosion occurred

Dr. Frank E. Shipley, called to aid the women stricken by escaping gas, was injured in the explosion. Eight stitches were made about his head

GIRL ABOUT TOWN—Another young Rockefeller breaks into the news. And now comes David, fresh from the halls of learning at Hahvad. He's the youngest of the lads, and what does he do but win the Polka contest at the Cloudland saloon run by his father, John D. His leaping and bounding were amazing, and his partner was Peggy McGrath . . .

The bachelor lasses of the town suffered a great loss when beautiful Whitney Bourne married the tycoon, Stanton Griffis. She is especially devoted to skiing, and now proposes to ski on water, at a tournament in Nassau. That's one I've never seen—wonder what it is.

The biggest ballet hit of the winter here was not the Monte Carlo Troupe, but the American Ballet Theater, in which Patricia Bowman pirouettes, among others. So successful was their recent season at the Center Theater that it is probable that they will have another season this spring, as well as next fall.

Lillian Gish and Percy Warama and the Chicago company of that great comedy-drama hit, "Life With Father," gave a dress rehearsal for members of the local troupe a few afternoons back.

Nunnally Johnson, the recent bridegroom, and Charles MacArthur, husband of Helen Hayes, are finishing a play called "The Great Profile," which will give you a notion of the subject of the thing.

The Gentler Sex

By MALVINA LINDSAY

On the Fashion Front

Mrs. Henrietta DeGoofey has won her campaign to retain the short skirt!

Mrs. DeGoofey

The famous reformer at her press conference yesterday, triumphantly waved a sheaf of Paris fashion dispatches at reporters.

"All of these state," she announced, "that women's skirts are to be 'shorter if anything' this spring and summer. That I attribute directly to the work of the Do Something About It League, and particularly to the fine generalship of Prof. Byron Bysche Aspic, only man member of the league, who was in charge of my short skirt campaign.

"Moreover, Professor Aspic has just telegraphed from Palm Beach that the ballerina play suit is gaining ground daily with dowagers. The professor, as you may know is now devoting his efforts to shorter beachwear for women and is also carrying on the league's fight against Elizabeth Hawes' movement to put women into trousers."

"Will you take a vacation from reforms now, Mrs. DeGoofey, that you have won your short skirt fight?" asked a travel editor.

New Campaign Against Freak Styles

"No indeed! I am mobilizing for a gigantic offensive on the fashion front. I have been looking over the new spring styles and I see things that must be nipped in the bud instantly if women are to be saved from making public spectacles of themselves this spring and winter."

"To what do you object?" asked a representative of The Daily Muckraker.

"To a great many things. I will list them if you have your pencils and notebooks ready.

"First, I view with alarm the lacquered fruit trend on hats and in lapel gadgets. Remember what happened when Eve got hold of an apple. I shudder to think of the possibilities when every other woman is going around this spring and summer wearing a table centerpiece on her head or displaying clusters of oranges, bananas, lemons, currants, etc., as a hat trim or a corsage. I also strenuously object to the wearing of carrots, tomatoes, onions, etc. as boutonnierres.

"Second, the mermaid tail silhouette for evening, in fact, the whole aquatic trend toward sea shells, fishnets etc., in attire, disturbs me greatly. It has been bad enough to view women in beaded gowns and sequins. Now imagine them waddling around in fish scales, and flouncing mermaid tails about their feet! And something tells me that all of the women who are definitely not mermaids will appear in these gowns.

Prof. Aspic

"Third, the tropical craze is something that should be taken in hand early. If not, we will have countless broken homes, and even the staidest of men will live in such disturbed mental states that they will no longer be able to earn livings for their families. Just imagine what will happen to men if they are to be surrounded by Polynesian bathing girls, Hawaiian hula dancers, East Indian princesses and veiled harem favorites at every party they attend!

Zoo Tendency To Be Combatted

"Fourth, something must be done without delay about the movement toward zebra stripes and horse blanket plaids. It is inevitable that all the wrong women will get all the wrong stripes and checks, and that before the summer is over we will feel every time we step on to the street that we are in a zoo whose keepers are Scotch highlanders.

"Fifth, I am planning immediate action to tame down costume jewelry. Last summer we wore clotheslines around our necks. Now I understand even sombreros are being strung into necklaces. If this continues, we will all be going around with necks like turtles or at least with big dowagers' humps as a result of the shackles around our throats.

"Sixth, I am planning to do something about club foot shoes, pokebonnet or halo hats on older women, the ominous descent of waistlines, the peek-a-boo blouse, and the beading and pink ribbon in slips and nightgowns, to say nothing of the ruffles on panties."

"Well, don't you approve of the new spring tendency to dress to please one man rather than men?" asked a marriage adviser.

"That, I should say, would depend upon the man. However, I have always been in favor of pleasing men in such non-essentials as clothes—and then doing as you please about more important things."

"How do you think men can be best pleased in dress?" asked a fashion editor.

"I shall refer that question to Professor Aspic who upon his return from Palm Beach will publish a monograph which will be of wide interest to my women. It is entitled 'Transitory Reactions of the Male Optic Nerve in Response to Beach Stimuli.'"

Your Figure, Madam

Exercising Makes Cripple Ballet Dancer

Nana Gollner Gives Formula for Keeping The Legs Beautiful

By Ida Jean Kain

WHEN A girl who has been so crippled that she couldn't even walk becomes one of the world's great ballerinas, that is a miracle. And, to come directly to the point, it is a story which should fire the courage of those who are actually handicapped, and spur the determination of the estimated 34-out-of-every-35 women whose legs could be improved in appearance.

Nana Gollner, with the Ballet Theater in New York, is the heroine. At the age of 2 she had infantile paralysis. Both feet were left with a clubbed conformation. Her ankles were too weak to support her and she couldn't walk. But today she has a pair of strong, slim, shapely legs that carry her surely through those amazingly intricate figures and breath-taking leaps.

In the years between there lies a story—of exercise. First, walking in the sand—if you can call it walking when the person has to be half-carried and even then falls down at every other step. Walking in the sand is harder than on the level. The doctor ordered it to strengthen those weak foot and leg muscles.

Went on to Tiptoes

When she succeeded in walking alone, she began to try to walk on the tiptoes. As soon as she was able to do a thing, it was made a little harder! Walking on the toes and in the sand is very much harder than walking on a level in the usual fashion. But the treatment was a success. At the age of 8, Nana started ballet lessons, also at the doctor's suggestion. And now, at 21, she is conceded to be one of the really great ballerinas.

Naturally, she thinks there is no limit to what can be accomplished with exercise. But, fully aware of the extravagant expectations of a machine-vender age, she says:

"Miracles cannot be accomplished all at once. They take time. The person who takes up an exercise program for whatever reason should go about it slowly to get into condition. And then, the daily exercises should be taken slowly. The ballet dancer always 'warms up' for 15 to 30 minutes before attempting the more difficult steps. Otherwise she might get a cramp or even tear a tendon. With daily exercise or a long program, it is important to begin slowly.

Don't Fear Bulges

The ballerina's warming-up exercises constitute a set that would be very beneficial to the average pair of underexercised legs. Don't worry about overdevelopment. Nana is convinced that bulgy leg muscles in the dancer are caused by faulty technique. Her own measurements are: Thigh, 21 inches; calf, 13 inches; ankle, 8 inches. And for your incidental information her other measurements are: Bust, 32½ inches; waist, 24½ inches; hips, 32 inches.

The exercises are:

Stand with heels together and toes turned straight out at sides so that feet are on one straight line. Very slowly, on the count of four, bend the knees deeply, keeping heels on floor, and then rise on the count of four. Turning the toes straight out and standing with heels together is no easy trick, but it is wonderful for strengthening those weak inner thigh muscles.

Mary Haworth's Mail

Girl's One Beau Bores Her, but Men Are Scarce Where She Lives; What to Do?

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: I have been going with a boy for over two years but I am not the least in love with him. I don't think I ever could be, as I feel absolutely nothing when he kisses me and I do not miss him when I don't see him. He is nice enough looking, has good manners and we are about the same age (23) and members of the same crowd. He is very bashful and self-effacing and while I am rather shy myself, I hate it in others. I think this is what annoys me most with him.

My problem is this: Should I continue going with him and try to make myself like him? Or should I break off? I live in a rural community where there are 10 nice looking females to one poor male. Mother says I can either go with this boy or sit home and be an old maid. She is probably right; he may be my only chance for a husband.

I might add that about the time I started going with this boy I was greatly attracted to, and later fell very much in love with, a former employer for whom I was doing some extra work—going to his house after I left the office. He was much older than I, and the type who has a girl in every town and cares for none. He moved away from town but still comes to my office when he is here on visits, as he is a good friend of my present employer. I realize that my love for him was hopeless. All I gained was an understanding of how wonderful real love can be. Thank you any advice you may be able to give me.

VILLAGE GIRL.

Taking the Goods The Gods Provide

DEAR VILLAGE GIRL: I imagine that 99 out of 100 scholarly theorists in the field of happy marriage would veto the suggestion of a girl's marrying a nice man without love, simply because he was Johnny-on-the-spot and she had no alternate choice. Yet I think a good many marriages are made for that reason, and I hazard the guess that a substantial number of them turn out well enough; so well, indeed, that many an indifferent bride becomes, in time, a deeply devoted and richly contented wife.

In fact, I think this is a marriage pattern peculiar to the rural communities and village settlements of the Nation—and I speak from firsthand knowledge of life in such localities. I have heard girls with whom I grew up, with whom I went to school, tell—in a humorous, pardonably complacent way—how they married George or Henry, John or Jim, with a dubiety that amounted to downright shrinking, only to discover with the passage of time that he suited them down to the ground; that they wouldn't trade him "for the best man on earth," etc., etc.

Such success is handwrought; not heaven-sent. It derives primarily from the resourceful and steadfast character of the contracting parties, who concentrate their talents, pioneer fashion, in making the most of what they have, and who do not waste themselves in poetical preoccupation with the possible wonders beyond the horizon. Theirs is an admirably practical and frequently an astonishingly rewarding form of enterprise—and you might do worse than to follow their example.

Of course, it does seem rather discouraging, on the surface, that your beau hasn't been able to arouse the slightest spark of responsive interest in your breast, after two years' courtship and some experimental lovemaking. But it is possible that you haven't bothered to try to know him for what he is and could become with proper encouragement and cooperation.

Shyness and clumsiness in courtship are indicative of mental delicacy and emotional sensitivity in a boy his age. And it is possible that your illicit interlude with the Local Lothario contrived prematurely to spoil your appetite for wholesome young romance.

My advice is this: Stop looking down your nose at the boy because he isn't a polished ladies' man. Stop holding it against him that he hasn't the suavely aggressive technique of a middle aged philanderer. Just as a friendly gesture, help him overcome his shy ineptitude, which no doubt is greatly intensified by your subtly superior, vaguely bored reaction. Learn to talk to him, intimately and honestly, about your expectations of life and love and so on. Then see what you arrive at.

If, after perhaps a year of such open-minded exploration of his potential compatability, you still don't feel a shred of emotion for him, then check him off your list of matrimonial possibilities. But even so, it seems to me, you might keep him as a friend, and let him take you places, if you have no other suitors. You can't meet men if you don't get around, and you can't get very far without a squire, in our present social set-up.

after a cold then what

DOCTORS stress remaining in bed until the body temperature is normal. Sound advice.

You know how weak you feel after a cold. Colds play havoc in weakening the body. The story is well told in the blood picture. It is important to build back body strength right away to carry the load of work, worries, and loss of sleep. A weakened body may be more susceptible to relapse or long drawn out recovery.

So reason sensibly and take the choice of millions by immediately starting on a course of S.S.S. Tonic—taken three times a day immediately before meals. In the absence of a focal infection or organic disease, you should note improvement in the way you feel and look within the first 10 days. The confidence of millions over many years is the best testimonial of this product.

An experience with S.S.S Tonic will cause you to say to your friends, S.S.S. made me "feel and look like myself again."

Perhaps you have a helpless patient to care for. You need to know such routine noursing procedure as how ot turn him in bed easily.

First step is to put his near leg over his far leg toward the other side of the bed. Place one hand under his buttocks and your other hand under his shoulders then lift up and pull slightly toward yourself at the same time. This will swing the patient over gently.

And how important it is sometimes to be able to recognize symptoms of serious ailments. Often the dread pneumonia is mistaken for a bad cold, for like many colds it starts with chills and fever. But if there are also rapid breathing, a hacking cough, a pain in the side and sputum the color of iron rust, call the doctor at once.

Mrs. Francis Biddle Is Working On Poem for Radio Choric Players

Novel Program to Present Verse By Three Writers; Her Contribution Is 'Plain Chant for America'

By Hope Ridings Miller

WHILE MANY OFFICIAL notables, worn out with the season's whirl have called a halt and are planning to get away from it all for a quiet Lenten rest, Mrs. Francis Biddle, wife of the new Solicitor General, is working harder than ever—but not at social circling.

HOPE R. MILLER

Known to the literary world as Katherine Garrison Chapin, she is burning the midnight oil to expand and develop a poem, "Plain Chant for America" that was published some time ago in a nationally known magazine and will be presented on an unusual program in Philadelphia next month.

It seems there's a movement under way to bring poetry to the masses (and I don't mean the New Masses) by way of the stage, and some of Miss Chapin's work is to be used in launching the experiment.

The idea was born and took root sometime ago in the mind of Emile Beliveau, who was formerly connected with the Federal Theater in New York. As he saw it, a poetry presentation which combined the best features of the old Greek chorus, straight drama, and the tableau effect, would have a wide appeal. Accordingly, he formed a small company, called it the Choric Players and proceeded to take a flyer in an entirely new field of art.

"Giving poetry another dimension" is the whole idea, according to Mrs. Biddle or Miss Chapin—take your choice, who is enthusiastic about the project because the feels it will foster an interest in poetry among persons who rarely read it.

Mrs. Biddle will go to New York tomorrow for a brief visit with her sister, Cornelia Van A. Chapin, the widely known sculptor; and while she is there, she and Beliveau will complete plans for the program which is to take place in Philadelphia's Play and Players Theater on March 14.

Three Poets To Be Included

Sol Kaplan, pianist and composer, who recently appeared in a one-man concert at Carnegie Hall, has written the music for the presentation, which is creating wide interest in Philadelphia and will draw a number of Washingtonians.

The Choric Players include 12 actors, one being a sister of Martha Graham, the noted dancer. Selections from three poets will be presented. In addition to Miss Chapin's work, there will by Alfred Kreymborg's "Blood of Earth," and one of Amy Lowell's poems.

MRS. FRANCIS BIDDLE

While Beliveau's idea is still a new one, it has already been tried out with some success. Last-Labor Day, a program of the type to be presented in Philadelphia was given in Woodstock, N. Y., and later similar ventures were tried out at the Millbrook School and before the Poetry Society of America.

Kreymborg, who is a widely known poet and playwright, and Mrs. Biddle were among the first creative artists who rallied to Beliveau's support. Having just finished a dramatic series, "The Planets," for the radio, Kreymborg selected one in the group that he thought might be developed and presented according to Beliveau's plan. This is the selection to be included on the March program.

Now Working On Third Book

Mrs. Biddle's interest in the work of Beliveau's Choric Players stemmed from her triumphs last year when her symphonic poem, "Lament for the Stolen," was given by a chorus of 250 women's voices in conjunction with the Philadelphia Orchestra, Eugene Ormandy directing. Since then, she has been solicited on all sides by composers who have urged her to write lyrics that can be adapted to a musical score.

Meanwhile, she has been working on another book of poems, which when finished will be her third. And if she finds any free time this spring, she may go out to the Southwest for a visit with her son, Randolph, who is attending the University of New Mexico.

Mrs. Warren Delano Robbins Plans Extended Vacation in South America

IN BETWEEN HER WORK at ferreting out nonshrinkable, nonstretchable and noninflammable materials for United States embassies all over the world, Mrs. Warren Delano Robbins, of the State Department, has been planning a good neighborly vacation. She will leave in June for a South American holiday with extended stop-offs in Venezuela and the Argentine.

From Buenos Aires Mrs. Robbins will hop across the river to Montevideo, the Uruguayan capital, to see how work on our new legation is progressing. For some time there's been talk of her paying an official visit to the new legations at Haiti and Santo Domingo, for which she has been supervising the decoration, but nothing has been settled yet.

A SOUTH AMERICAN by birth, Mrs. Robbins has a mother and a son in Buenos Aires and another son in Caracas. Edward Robbins is with an oil company in the Venezuelan capital and his brother is with the National City Bank in Argentine. Mrs. Edward Robbins will return to this country soon to have her second child, after which her mother-in-law will escort the family back to Caracas.

Mme. de Bruyn, mother of Mrs. Warren Robbins, visited Washington last year and liked it so much that she wants to return. So there's a possibility that Mrs. Robbins may bring this lively and attractive great-grandmother back with her this summer.

As the wife of the late Warren Robbins, diplomat, Mrs. Robbins moved something like 36 times in 15 years, and so knows all there is to know about fixing up a residence.

MR. AND MRS. WILLIAM BREESE have been giving informal and pleasant luncheons this winter after Sunday skating. Guests the other day included two attractive American refugees from Europe, Miss Adelaide Whitehouse and Kenneth Pendar. This is Miss Whitehouse's first winter in this country in 12 years, she has spent the others skiing in Switzerland and Austria. She has a secretarial job at the Red Cross and has joined the large group of young ladies living at the very respectable Anchorage.

Mr. Pendar returned from Paris recently. He has an apartment there and has been studying archeology.

IT'S REPORTED that the State Department Harold Tittmans, now stationed in Geneva, have been ordered to Rome, where Mr. Tittman will work with Myron Taylor . . . C. Burke Elbrick is now third secretary of our embassy to Poland in Angiers, France. As he is the only diplomat to accompany Ambassador Biddle there, Mr. Elbrick might also be said to be acting counselor, first and second secretary, to say nothing of military and naval attache. Stationed in Prague when Hitler marched in, the Elbricks were transferred to Warsaw just in time for the blitzkrieg. They dodged bombs as far as Rumania and then proceeded to Munich, reaching that city the day the beer hall was bombed after Hitler spoke.

GOINGS AND COMINGS: The Lucius Wilmerdings have returned from Sea Island . . . Mr. and Mrs. L. Corrin Strong are at the Hillsboro Club, Pompano, Fla. . . . Mr. and Mrs. Reverdy Wadsworth have gone back to their home in Geneseo, N. Y., after a visit here with Mrs. Henry Latrobe Roosevelt.

Editor Sees Trend Toward Chinese Victory

American Policy in That Direction Would Shorten War, Dr. Lattimore Tells Section of Voteless League

By Jessie Ash Arndt,
The Post Club Editor.

The trend in the Far East today is definitely toward the victory of China, and American policy, if directed in line with that trend, will operate to shorten the war and contribute to a sound and lasting peace, in the opinion of Dr. Owen Lattimore, director of the Walter Hines Page School of International Relations and editor of "Pacific Affairs."

Dr. Lattimore, addressing an open meeting of the Department of Government and Foreign Policy of the Voteless D. C. League of Women Voters—a luncheon at the Y. W. C. A.—declared that Germany's abandonment of her anticomintern pact with Japan and her alliance with Russia was an indication that Germany recognized months ago that the ultimate victory in China would go to the Chinese. Realizing that she could not deal with Russia through an alliance with Japan, Germany turned about and adopted other tactics, Dr. Lattimore asserted. He pointed out that the Germans discerned the trend in China at the time of the fall of Hankow, when the United States was at the height of its defeatist attitude in regard to China.

He scored America's double-minded view of "liking" the Chinese people but assuming that Russia, Japan or anybody else but China might influence the outcome in the Far East—discounting the Chinese people as anything but a passive entity.

"The Chinese today are in full charge of their own destiny and are taking a major part in the destiny of the Far East. Any policy which does not recognize this is destined to failure," he said.

The more the United States works with the trend toward victory for China, the easier it will be in the Far East to achieve a peace without indulging in power politics making a pawn of a foreign nation or permitting ourselves to be made a pawn. If we back the emerging independent Chinese nation, we shall be contributing to a peace of a recognized kind and not one which is merely waiting for the next trouble to begin, he said.

"America's true interest in the Far East is to have a valid peace—not one that is so many sections on paper, signed and sealed—but which has growing power of its own," said Dr. Lattimore.

"Only guarantee of the territorial and administrative integrity of China can assure a lasting peace. If we countenance continued Japanese aggression and assist in patching up a peace, we leave the roots of continued strife."

Dr. Lattimore sharply criticized the United States' refusal to recognize "the responsibility of negativeness." He pointed out the inconsistency of this country's attitude in providing Japan with 90 per cent of the implements of war that make it possible for her to carry on her program of invasion in China despite our professed sympathy for China, and our refusal to take action to stop it.

"It is a case of pulling the bed covers over your head in the hope that God won't see you," he said.

Dr. Lattimore discounted the possibility of an alliance between Russia and Japan, but in event America pursues its present policy of aiding Japan against China, he suggested the possibility that China, in desperation, might join a four-power pact with Russia, Germany and Japan (on guarantee the Japanese were on their way out). This, he said, has been seriously discussed by German authorities as a means of harassing France and Great Britain through their back door. The plan would be to arm Japan and China for that purpose in the Far East and thus divert British and French forces and materials from the scene of the European conflict.

Dr. Lattimore was introduced by Mrs. C. S. Duncan, chairman of the foreign policy department of the league, and Mrs. M. O. Lorenz, former department chairman and now league president, opened the meeting.

Luise Rainer Guest at Tea

Luise Rainer, here to play "Saint Joan" with the Washington Civic Theater as a benefit for the Red Cross, was guest of honor yesterday afternoon at a tea given at the Raleigh Hotel by the Newspaper Women's Club of Washington. She talked informally to the company of more than 50 guests, telling something of the roles for which she is famous, including that in "The Good Earth."

Receiving with her was Miss Katharine Brooks, president of the club. Miss Rainer was dressed in a closely fitted black coat trimmed with silver fox and wore a little hat of the same fur.

Alternating at the tea table were Mrs. Jacob Leander Loose, Mrs. Charles Stanley White, Mrs. Sophie Kepner, recording secretary of the club; Miss Margaret Germond, treasurer, and Mrs. Kate Scott Brooks, honorary president.

Girl Scout Leaders Hear Dr. Lewis Explain Program

Health and Safety Work Is Taught Simply as Possible, Director Tells Association in Talk at Annual Dinner

"The best way to keep wide awake is not to forget to go to sleep."

This is one of the health rules Dr. Margaret Lewis, director of health and safety for the Girl Scouts of America, cited last night in her address at the annual dinner of the Girl Scout Leaders Association, held at Pierce Hall, Sixteenth and Harvard.

Here from New York to conduct a series of meetings at Girl Scout headquarters in connection with the national health and safety program, Dr. Lewis illustrated in her discussion, the simple ways in which the girls are encouraged to make wholesome "sleeping, eating and exercising" a part of daily routine.

Instead of being given complicated rules of diet, the Girl Scouts are offered simple guidance such as "Let the class colors be green, with meat in the background," and "The stomach will go on a strike if it is overworked."

Dr. Lewis told the members of the association (who comprise all the adult leaders of the more than 3,000 Girl Scouts in Washington) that health and safety rules should not be preached but inculcated as a natural and normal part of happy living.

Photography is used to reveal good and bad posture and awaken a desire to cultivate the good, she said. The girls also learn that housework is more valuable as exercise than any expensive gymnasium formula, although not so popular because you don't have to pay for it.

In the safety program, said Dr. Lewis, homemaking should be dramatized as a cooperative adventure, where safety counts as much as art. The girls are taught to be mindful of little things like not turning off the electricity with wet hands, not using inflammable cleaning fluid near heat—learning to avoid carelessness.

Change Meeting Date

The Women's Army and Navy League has changed the date of its meeting from Thursday to the next Thursday.

Hatch Explains Act to Council

As a matter of precaution any absentee voter's service in which Government employes are engaged as volunteers should be divorced from party affiliation, Senator Carl Hatch told members of the Democratic Women's National Council at its meeting at the Willard last night.

The council, of which Mrs. Floyd Cook is president, invited the Senator, author of the Hatch Act, prohibiting Government employes from taking part in political activities, to address the meeting and explain the act. Introduced by Mrs. Walter H. Maloney, he gave the background of the legislation and cited, in answer to questions, interpretations by the Attorney General and the Civil Service Commission.

The women of the council were particularly concerned with the status of their service as volunteers in the Absentee Voters Bureau conducted under the sponsorship of the Democratic National Committee. The council members have assisted in giving many thousands of absentee voters in the District information and advice on their voting rights while they are residing away from home.

This service, only if entirely independent of party politics, would comply with the provisions of the act, Senator Hatch said, explaining it then would come under the head of non-partisan public service.

Liquor Board Reverses Self In Lee's Case

Tavern Is Granted A Class C License; Inquiry to Go On, Eberharter Says

On the eve of a Congressional inquiry into District liquor licensing, the Alcoholic Beverage Control Board late yesterday reversed itself and granted a Class C license to Ralph A. Lee, proprietor of Lee's Tavern, whose case has aroused considerable interest on Capitol Hill.

Lee and officials of the Interior and Treasury departments, who had been consulted before the board rejected the former application, are scheduled as the first witnesses before a special House sub-committee when hearings open in the House District Committee room at 10 o'clock this morning.

The ABC Board's action came on the heels of another abrupt reversal following questioning of Thomas E. Lodge, chairman, and Mrs. Agnes K. Mason, vice chairman, of the board by members of the District committee who asked for the investigation.

Inquiry to Proceed

Chairman Eberharter of the House subcommittee upon being informed of the board's change of mind in the Lee case, said that it would not prevent a thorough airing of the matter.

"There's just as much reason for investigating this case now as before," he said. "Maybe the board was right the first time and wrong the second time."

The ABC board, in a statement signed by its three members, explained that "additional evidence" had turned up and that the Acting Secretary of Interior had withdrawn objections.

"This board has given careful attention and much study to the additional evidence and all of the problems presented in the matter of the application of Lee's Ice Cream, Inc., for a Class C license at 2622 E street northwest," the board stated.

"Previously the National Park Service and the Federal Works Agency, Public Buildings Administration, units under the Department of Interior, and the Acting Secretary of the Interior protested the issuance of this license.

"Subsequently, the Undersecretary, who had been Acting Secretary at the time of the letter of protest, advised the board that after review and reconsideration of the protest formerly made against this application the Department of the Interior withdraws its objection to the granting of this license.

"This board had doubt prior to the denial of this license that it was in the public interest to issue a class C license for these premises at this location.

Executive Session

"However, it is has now been established by evidence that the area is well policed; that the restaurant is a bona fide one of a desirable character; that it is now and will not become a night club; that by agreement the issuance of this license will not in any way enhance the value of this property upon condemnation as contemplated by the United States Government, and that arrangements for the use of the premises meet all requirements of the Department of the Interior."

Since the refusal of the ABC board to grant the license several weeks ago, Lee has conferred with numerous members of Congress and appeared before the Eberharter subcommittee last week in an executive session.

Members of the District Committee, while questioning Lodge the day the liquor inquiry was ordered, implied by their questions that he had solicited the objections from the Federal department.

Lee had informed members that no objections to the license had been filed with the board up to the day a hearing was scheduled. The hearing was postponed, however, by the board, and the objections were filed subsequently, he said.

The ABC Board acted even more promptly in the other case cited by House District Committee members. It involved the refusal of the board to renew a Class C license to Leo J. Rossiter, who operates a restaurant at 4132 Georgia avenue.

Welliver to Testify

Immediately after the committee's informal inquiry on February 5 the ABC Board called another hearing and four days later renewed the license.

Previously the board, with only two members had been tied, with Lodge voting against and Mrs. Mason for renewal of the license. On the second decision, the new member, William P. Meredith, voted with Mrs. Mason.

Chairman Eberharter said that the subcommittee would hear Edward M. Welliver, former counsel of the ABC board, tomorrow and Representative Sheppard (Democrat), of California, sponsor of a Government dispensary system of liquor sales, on Friday.

Michael Ciuffreda, 35, sign shop proprietor, shows the frayed ends of the rope to his wife, holding Michael, jr., 7 months old, and tells how he had just lowered the scaffold from 100 feet above the street to 15 feet when it crashed. Chinese Dies Like 2 Cousins In Mystery

Launderer Succumbs After Eating; Symptoms Indicate Poisoning

Washington's Oriental mystery, once thought solved, cropped up again yesterday with the discovery of a possible link between the death Sunday of a 41-year-old Chinese launderer, and the fatal poisoning of his two cousins February 5.

The Post learned from unimpeachable sources yesterday that Lee Kim Sing, 41, of 1401 Sixth street northwest, who died Sunday, had symptoms exactly the same as Lee Ling, 68, and Lee Fay, 34, who died two weeks earlier. The first two men were poisoned by an insect powder ingredient.

An autopsy performed yesterday by Deputy Coroner Richard Rosenberg revealed that Lee Kim Sing's death was brought about by a stomach inflammation that led to paralysis of a nerve supplying the heart and lungs. Dr. Rosenberg believes that the inflammation was produced by a "gastric irritant, or corrosive."

The District chemist is expected to complete an anlysis of the contents of the dead man's stomach today.

Certificates of accidental death were issued in the earlier fatalities by Coroner A. Magruder McDonald. He said that police reported they could find no suspicious circumstances. Police officers who are investigating Lee Kim Sing's death have turned in a similar report.

Lee Kim Sing was found dead Sunday by an employe in his laundry at the Sixth street address. The employe, Sing Lee, told police that he prepared the lunch of boiled rice, Chinese potatoes, celery and spareribs after which his employer was taken ill. Sing Lee said that he ate the food, as did Lee Kim Sing's dog. Neither he nor the dog felt any ill effects, he said.

The two earlier deaths followed a midnight breakfast in the 1800 block of Seventh street northwest. Five Chinese, all cousins, partook. Two died and three became ill. A sixth cousin did not eat any of the food.

Chevy Chase Women Hear Treaty Plea

Grady Tells Club High Tariff Wall Caused Depression

Henry F. Grady, Assistant Secretary of State, last night defended the Administration's reciprocal trade agreement program before a forum meeting of the Chevy Chase Women's Club. One hundred and seventy-five persons attended the session.

The State Department official denounced America's earlier tariff policy. "It is hard to imagine any legislation less thought out, less purposeful, less planned, or more chaotic than the Hawley-Smoot tariff," Grady said.

Blames Collapse on Tariff

It was generally recognized by 1933 that excessive protectionism had been in a large measure responsible for the world-wide economic collapse, declared the Assistant Secretary of State. There was a need for a general lowering of trade barriers throughout the world and the establishment of trade on the basis of equal opportunity for all trades, he added.

The speaker maintained that the present trade policy was adopted after careful consideration of the alternatives, which he described as dangerous to the Nation's export trade.

Visions Prosperity

"The country has prospered under the reciprocal trade agreements," asserted Grady. "Not only has our foreign trade expanded, but owing to increased employment which growing exports give the domestic market also have been more active."

The panel included F. J. Clare, of the National Grange; Dr. F. R. Eldridge, of the Department of Commerce; Dr. Caroline F. Ware, of American University, and Mrs. M. C. Lorenz, president, District Voteless League of Women Voters. Dr. Liefur Magnusson was chairman.

Lee Urges Proportional Voting Plan

Citizens President At Mount Pleasant Says It Will Help Suffrage Campaign

Proportional representation for District citizens when they get the vote was urged last night by William C. Lee, president of the Mount Pleasant Citizens Association, at a meeting of the District of Columbia Suffrage Association in the District Building.

Lee claimed that indorsement of proportional representation would bring more support for the suffrage movement, and pointed out that the organization he heads joined the campaign for local suffrage only after accepting the principle of proportional representation.

Many District residents fear that pressure groups, partly machines, or "cliques holding the balance of power," would control the government if the District were given the vote, he said. "Share-voting" would eliminate this possibility, he added.

Lee described two forms of proportional representation. According to the first system there would be no vote by parties, but voters would indicate first, second and third choice of candidates. By the second system citizens would vote for parties, and each party would be allotted a number of representatives corresponding with the share of the vote it received.

Members of the association objected that under either system there would be no voting by districts, and therefore some sections of the city might go unrepresented, and that party politics should have no place in District government, and therefore proportional representation would be impractical.

Samuel Schmerler was elected to the board of directors to succeed A. J. Driscoll, and President Wilbur S. Finch announced the appointment of the following committee chairmen: Membership, Sefton Darr; publicity, Samuel Schmerler; speakers, William H. Mondell.

Admission of the following new members was announced: John B. Colpoys, Judge Armand W. Scott, Walter N. Bastian, Karl Kindleberger, J. Forrest Reilly, Wilbur L. Gray, John Dillon Fitzgerald, Milton W. King.

Lincoln Park Citizens

An appropriation of $5 to the blood and serum bank of Children's Hospital was voted last night by the Lincoln Park Citizens Association, which voted to commend The Post for its "practical manner of assisting so worthy a cause."

The association voted also to send its president, A. D. Calvert, and Mrs. Calvert to the Federation of Citizens Associations banquet at the Mayflower Hotel, March 5. Forty-five new members were received.

Lincoln Civic Association

The Lincoln Civic Association last night urged President Roosevelt to appoinnt a colored representative to the Alley Dwelling Authority, empowered with "full rights and privileges."

The unit criticized the board, charging inefficiency and inaction. Members declared specifically that work had not commenced on the James Creek project in the Southwest, although the construction had been authorized in 1938.

Declaring themselves "disturbed" by the attitude of many children in colored schools, members voted to hold a conference with Parent-Teacher Association officials of the Francis Junior High, Stevens Briggs and Montgomery schools.

The unit also went on record protesting the abandonment of the Francis School swimming pool at Twenty-fifth and N streets northwest.

'Gas' Frauds Found Few, Inquiry Told

New Auto Fuel Laws for D. C. Are Indicated, However

Legislation imposing penalties for the substitution or adulteration of gasoline sold in Washington, providing the District code is found inadequate, may result from the House subcommittee inquiry into gasoline marketing, Chairman Nichols (Democrat), of Oklahoma, indicated yesterday.

Although the inquiry failed to produce any evidence to substantiate charges of widespread misrepresentation in motor fuel sales, Nichols said he will continue hearings "to allay public fears that somebody is being gypped."

George M. Roberts, superintendent of weights, measures and markets, told the subcommittee that his inspectors had found no flagrant cases of misrepresentation or short measure since March, 1939, when prosecutions were instituted against one oil concern on eight short-measure counts.

Reports on inspections made this month, in fact, showed that some service stations are selling regular gasoline with an octane rating as high as that established as standard for high test.

Octane Rating Found Higher

The octane rating on high test gas, moreover, in other instances is higher than what has been considered the standard.

Responding to insistence by Nichols that he express his opinions freely, Roberts advised the enactment of legislation to fix three grades of gasoline—high test, straight and low grade—with minimum octane counts for the first two classes. The legislation has been disapproved by the commissioners.

When questioned by Nichols, who comes from an oil producing State, regarding his recommendations as to the minimum octane counts for each class, Roberts admitted he was not expert on the subject.

"I don't know much about gasoline," he remarked. "I don't drive an automobile."

Roberts revealed that his recommendations were based on the findings of analysts at the Bureau of Standards with regard to the octane counts of 83 samples of gasoline taken in the early part of 1939.

Fifty-nine showed ratings in excess of 76, and 24 were under 76 and, consequently, not properly highly test gasoline, Roberts said.

Fears Minimum Standard

When 76 was suggested as the minimum octane count for high test gasoline in the three grades recommended by Roberts, the sub-committee chairman said he believed the minimum would become the maximum and this would discourage oil companies from going above it.

Most high test gasoline, as subsequent reports showed, have an octane count of 79 and, occasionally, 80 or 81.

Nichols pointed out, moreover, that, while the high octane count prevents motor knocking and gives a motor greater power, it does not improve the quality of gasoline. Other factors, he added, may detract from this advantage.

The Consumers Conference on High Prices and Profiteering sent to the Commissioners yesterday a letter suggesting that gasoline dealers who sell inferior gasoline under the guise of high-test gas be prosecuted under Title 6, Section 265, of the District code, which relates to fraudulent advertising.

The House inquiry will continue today in Room 226 with experts from the Bureau of Standards scheduled to testify.

Capital News In Brief

Pastor Foils Thief

A pastor who was disturbed by the crash of glass as he was writing a sermon last night captured a burglar at the point of a double-barrelled shotgun—then he turned in a fire alarm to hold his man.

Responding to the fire alarm at Fifth and P streets northwest, police and firemen were amazed to find the Rev. Emery C. Proctor, pastor of the Fork Amie Zion Church, Fork, Md., covering a 27-year-old colored man with a shotgun. One of the prisoner's hands was full of groceries; the other, high in the air.

The Rev. Mr. Proctor, who lives at 1427 Fifth street northwest, explained that he was writing a sermon late last night when aroused by the crash of glass. Taking along his hunting rifle, which he kept nearby since his home was rifled last year, he investigated and found that the grocery store downstairs had been broken into. Waiting patiently, the minister arrested the culprit as he came out of the grocery.

Plays to Be Given

An evening of comedy will be staged tonight by the Washington Readers Club in the alliance room of All Souls' Unitarian Church, Sixteenth and Harvard streets northwest. Two plays, "The Flattering Word," by George Kelly, and "Kate's Press Agent," by Edward Frieberger, and a musical program are scheduled.

Collapses in Restaurant

Edward R. Deane, 43, of 6040 Thirteenth place northwest, secretary of the Traffic Bureau's board of revocations and restitutions, collapsed yesterday while having lunch in a downtown restaurant. He was taken to Emergency Hospital and treated for a heart ailment and high-blood pressure. At the hospital last night Deane's condition was reported as fair.

1,200 Hear Plea for War On Atheism

Dr. Elmer Fridell, Other Baptist Notables Speak At Convocation

Climaxing one of the most enthusiastic local religious demonstrations in years, more than 1,200 Baptist convocation delegates last night heard pleas for a united Christian attack against atheism, communism and other evils.

Part of a crowd of some 2,000 men and women attending the day's meeting at Calvary Baptist Church—one of many denominational rallies being held throughout the land—they were told by Dr. Elmer Fridell, president of the Northern Baptist Convention that "scattered and unrelated efforts are futile against the forces now arrayed against Christianity."

Just five minutes before, the church auditorium rocked with the fervor of a revival meeting, as the audience, led by the 70-voiced joint choirs of First and Calvary Baptist churches, sang "Faith of Our Fathers" and other hymns. Herbert V. Pate, Calvary choir leader, conducted.

Rev. W. E. Woodbury Speaks

That "old-time revival spirit" was urged earlier in the day by the Rev. Walter E. Woodbury of the American Baptist Home Mission Society. He pointed out that in the last 10 or 15 years, church people, "especially women," have changed their moral standards in response to outward pressure, and cited increased purchases of tobacco, gum, cosmetics and "booze."

Following Dr. Fridell on last night's mass meeting program was Dr. Earl Frederick Adams, director of the Northern Baptist Convention's promotion board, who stressed the need of Christian cooperation in a "day of great challenge to the church."

"Creeping paralysis and impotency" have claimed organized religion in the United States, the Rev. M. Forest Ashbrook, also an official of the Northern Baptist group, charged in his convocation message. Pleading for a "revolution" in the church, he said the average citizen today expects nothing more of the church than "a friendly meeting place and a good influence."

Women Give Talks

Woman officials of the Northern Baptist Convention speaking during the day were Mrs. Leslie E. Swain, vice president of the Woman's American Baptist Foreign Mission Society, who arose from a sick bed to appear at the convocation; Miss Freada E. Koeker, of the public relations department, and Mrs. Elizabeth M. Finn, director of weekday and vacation church schools, American Baptist Publication Society.

Dr. William S. Abernethy, host pastor and president of the Washington Ministerial Association, and Dr. Rufus W. Weaver, executive secretary of the District of Columbia Baptist Convention, handled arrangements for the conclave. The Rev. Charles B. Austin, pastor of West Washington Baptist Church, was convocation president.

A mixed luncheon and dinners for women and youth groups of local Baptist churches were held at Calvary, and a men's dinner at First Congregational Church nearby.

Dr. John Briggs, pastor of Fifth Baptist Church, who returned to his pulpit last Sunday after a severe illness, came to the convocation supported by a cane, and offered the invocation for the afternoon meeting.

Bill Would Increase White House Guard

A bill to increase the permanent staff of White House policemen to its present temporary status was introduced in the House yesterday by Representative Lanham (Democrat), of Texas.

One additional sergeant and 19 additional privates, now detailed to the White House by the Metropolitan Police Department, are provided for in the measure. They would bring the permanent staff to four sergeants and 73 privates, plus one captain and two lieutenants.

Friendship House Is Visited by Speakers for Chest

Community Chest Volunteer speakers sampled the neighborliness of Friendship House last night as they toured the building, watched varied activities and were invited to take part in the square dance afterward.

The settlement at 619 D street southeast, which serves many children and adults in that vicinity, was astir with music, club meetings, art class and a social evening. The visitors, headed by J. S. Gorrell, chairman of the speakers' group, heard from Miss Lydia Burklin, executive of the settlement, that its activities range from ping pong to pottery, photography to wrestling, cookery to basketry, clay modeling to carpentry, day nursery care to adult parties.

The speakers' group of about 30 persons ate supper at the settlement before exploring the large house. The visit gave the speakers background for helping to interpret the Chest agencies to the public.

Goldberg Defeats Fenske in 1000 at Newark

Hoyas' Mile Relay Team Beats N.Y.U.

Terps' Kehoe Wins 880 in 1:54.4 Time; Alnwick Runs Hot Anchor Leg for G. U.

By the Associated Press

Newark, N. J., Feb. 19.—Sanford Goldberg, the "flying fireman" of the Millrose A. A., New York, climaxed a series of upsets in Seton Hall College's track games tonight by scoring a decisive victory over Chuck Fenske, king of the season's milers, in the 1,000-yard run.

A crowd of 7,000 saw Goldberg, who received a 5-yard handicap, hand Fenske his first defeat of the season by a 7-yard margin. The victor was timed in 2:12.9, a new record for the meet.

The other principal events run on the flat board floor of Newark Armory, brought equally surprising results and fast times.

Georgetown Wins

In a special match race, Georgetown University's mile relay team defeated New York University in 3 minutes 22.4 seconds.

Mort Alnwick set a hot pace in a thrilling anchor leg performance to give his Hoya teammates a victory. Alnwick got the jump on Jimmy McPoland at the start and held him off to break the tape with a 4-yard lead.

N. Y. U.'s 2-mile relay team, paced by a superb 1:56 anchor leg run by Sophomore Leslie MacMitchell, defeated Manhattan and Fordham in 7:55.8. MacMitchell spotted Manhattan's Andy Neidnig 5 yards at the start of the final lap, caught him in the backstretch and won by a good 10 yards.

Gordon Wins Mile

Norman Gordon, of the Shanahan C. C., Philadelphia, won the J. B. mile run in record time of 4:14, taking advantage of a 50-yard handicap to beat Leslie MacMitchell, New York University ace; Carmen Bova, of Seton Hall, and Archie San Romani.

Jim Kehoe, of the University of Maryland, starting from the 10-yard mark, took the 880-yard handicap as the two favorites, John Borican and John Woodruff, ran out of the money, and Walter Mehl, of Wisconsin, won the 2-mile invitation special as Don Lash finished last.

The Waldron 600 ran true to form, however, as Jimmy Herbert, N. Y. U. Negro flash, gained an eyelash victory over Wesley Wallace, of Fordham, in 1:12.7.

Cunningham Fourth

Fenske found the going tough on the sharp turns of the armory track and never was able to offer Goldberg a serious threat. The New Yorker made his bid with three laps to go and breezed down the home stretch like a thoroughbred. Gene Venzke, of New York, made the Wisconsin star work hard to save second place while Glenn Cunningham, unable to pull out of his slump, was fourth.

The old meet record was 2:14.3, set by Borican last year.

Kehoe, running the half mile in 1:54.4, beat out Francis Slater, of New York, by a slim margin, with Campbell Kane of Indiana third. Neither Borican nor Woodruff ever threatened.

Lou Zamperini, the San Francisco star, withdrew from the mile because of a cold.

Mehl Sets Mark

Staging a driving finish, Walter Mehl, Big Ten champion from the University of Wisconsin, captured the Lloyd Two-Mile Special Invitation Run in record-smashing time to set off the fireworks.

Declining a 15-yard handicap and starting from scratch with Don Lash, the favorite, Mehl let loose a terrific kick on the home stretch to edge out the veteran Joe McCluskey, of Manchester, Conn., by a yard. The time was 9:03.4, the second fastest 2 miles ever run on a flat board track and smashed the old Newark mark of 9:12.6, created by Lash two years ago.

McCluskey, who received a 25-yard handicap, led Mehl for two laps, but was unable to match the Wisconsin boy's "kick" at the finish. Thomas Deckard, of Bloomington, Ind., winner of the event last year, finished third.

Chicago U. Upsets Minnesota, 35-32

Minneapolis, Feb. 19 (AP).—Chicago won its first Big Ten basketball game in eight starts this season by upsetting Minnesota, 35-32, tonight before 2,500 fans.

The Maroons staged a great second half rally to overcome the Gophers, scoring 21 points while holding their opponents to 11.

Superior height of the Chicagoans played a big part in the victory.

Minnesota dominated play in the first half and after the score had been virtually tied during the first seven or eight minutes went on to build up a 21-14 lead at the half.

It was the Gophers fifth loss in eight conference games.

Leoffler Enters Boxing Promotion in D. C.

Jimmy Erwin Slated to Be Matchmaker

Présent Plans Call For First Card in April; Fights to Be Staged at Riverside

By Al Hailey

First steps in the formation of a boxing partnership to promote professional fights in Riverside Stadium were taken yesterday as Severin G. Leoffler, owner of the Washington Eagles ice hockey team, announced definitely that he will step into the local fight picture this spring.

Jimmy Erwin, who piloted Petey Sarron to the world's featherweight championship, is expected to become Leoffler's matchmaker, although there was no definite announcement to this effect after a lengthy conference between the two yesterday in Leoffler's offices.

Erwin came to town from Birmingham, Ala., at the express wish of the Eagles' owner to discuss the possibility of a partnership.

Leoffler, who introduced Eastern Amateur League ice hockey to the Washington sports fans last fall, said that he plans to launch his boxing venture the second week in April.

Reports Put to Rest

Announcement of Leoffler's intentions to promote professional fights this spring and summer brought to rest reports that Joe Turner would be in charge at Riverside Stadium in competition with his old partner and matchmaker, Goldie Ahearn, who plans to conduct an outdoor season in Griffith Stadium beginning May 15.

Leoffler and Erwin, who met for the first time yesterday, were reluctant to discuss the extent of their conference, but both gave the impression they were highly pleased with the prospects in Washington.

Well known to Washington sports followers, Erwin has been associated with the fight business for 27 years as promoter, matchmaker and manager. He maintained an office for several years in the Capital and in May, 1936, brought Sarron to Washington to win the featherweight championship from Freddie Miller.

For the past two years, since Sarron's retirement, Erwin has been staging fights in Birmingham on a highly successful scale. He was recommended to Loeffler by several different fight authorities in Washington, the Eagles owner admitted.

Both Are Confident

Both Leoffler and Erwin expressed confidence in the future of the boxing business in the Capital, despite its recent decline which led to Ahearn's withdrawal until the outdoor season.

"I would be tickled to death to come back to Washington as a matchmaker," Erwin said. "Naturally, I have some business in Birmingham that will have to be cleaned up, and I don't think I will get back up here until around March 15. I have been doing very well in Birmingham, but I'd be a fool not to try to better myself. Washington is close to the center of boxing, and I think there's no reason why it shouldn't go over big here."

"I was very pleased with Mr. Erwin," Leoffler said. "I don't know much about boxing, but I don't think there's any question that it's been kicked around entirely too long. I don't think boxing has been staged in the right place or that it's been handled properly, and I believe Washington fans and the boxing commission would welcome a good setup and an arena such as Riverside."

The Riverside Stadium, which presently seats approximately 4,500 persons, with temporary seats installed, would seat about 6,000 for boxing shows.

Leoffler's entrance into the boxing business appears to be the answer to the District Boxing Commission's report of last year recommending new faces, competition for present promoters and a "clean and up-to-date arena" for local fights.

History Does Repeat! The Nats Get Another Crop of Cubans

Harris Sure YoungHaynes Will Deliver

Griff and Manager Are Optimistic Over His Chances; Mound Jobs 'Wide Open'

By Shirley Povich.

A Staff Correspondent

Orlando, Fla., Feb. 19.—A young man whom the Nats' bosses fondly believe is a big league pitcher joined the Washington camp today. He is Joe Haynes, who has been at leisure during the winter at his Columbia, S. C., home.

The quality of the pitching talent in the Nats' camp was improved considerably by the arrival of Haynes. Until today an observer scanning the dozen young pitchers in uniform here could point to only one individual who seemed to be a tangible asset—Joe Krakauskas. Haynes ups the figure to two.

Haynes comes closer to being the pet of Clark Griffith and Bucky Harris than any other young pitcher on the Washington team. And not without reason. Because the 22-year-old lad who stands 6 feet, 2 inches and weighs 180 pounds is a shining product of the Nats' farm system. Last year, his first in the majors, labeled Haynes as a potent asset.

Brilliant Work

He won only eight games against 12 defeats, but a good share of those victories were brilliant ones. He pitched a four-hitter against Detroit and another against Boston. With control that was remarkable for a raw rookie, Haynes appeared to be a solid sort of pitcher, best with his curve ball but able to show the batter a tolerable fast one.

Most of the 12 games he lost were during a siege when he was troubled with ailing tonsils. He came back after an operation to resume his earlier form and stage another winning streak. Added weight gave him more speed and it is no secret that both Griffith and Harris are counting on him as a regular starter next season.

Three years ago the Nats picked up the big fellow in the Florida State League. His record was nothing amazing in that circuit, but Griffith liked Haynes' "action." He bore with him in training camp despite the fact that an infection on the lad's left arm didn't permit him to play in any game. In 1938,

This Morning

With Shirley Povich

Orlando, Fla., Feb. 19.—The baseball players' annual golf tournament in Florida, played this week at Tampa, is getting to be one of the best shows of the entire sports calendar. The boys bring all of baseball's freedom of expression to the links.

POVICH

The polite game of golf, with its supposedly sacred injunctions against uproar and incriminations, is put brusquely through the wringer when the baseball athletes take to the fairways.

You can take a ball player off the diamond and put him on the golf course, but you can't take the ball player out of him. They still cling to their actions of the ball field with much the same tenacity as the public links golfer who, playing on the most sumptuous private club, insists on his proverbial eyeshade. There is nothing inhibited about baseball golfers. The old gaffers who invented the links game and propounded the rules of strict silence and complete deference to golf partners probably revolve in their mausoleums for a full week every year while the ball players' golf tourney is in progress.

Wrangling has been the keynote of every recent ball players' tournament. Last year the finals match between Wes Ferrell, then with the Yankees, and Paul Waner, of the Pirates, was more bickering than golf with a succession of disputed shots. Early in this year's tournament, Ferrell loudly claimed a foul when Ducky Medwick, of the Cardinals, took two practice shots from the tee before their medal play-off.

It is significant that the Associated Press in reporting the results of yesterday's finals between Ferrell and Pitcher Jack Russell noted that Ferrell "threw his clubs 'only' four times." That is far below par for Ferrell, who never has been bound by many of the stricter implications of the game. Long before he won the ball players' golf championship, the temperamental pitcher won the club-throwing title on the links.

Gerry Walker relates that Ferrell not only threw clubs nine times in one match, but with great deliberation actually broke a new set of wooden clubs and was working on his irons before the match was over.

"I've never seen the likes of it," Walker was saying. "I've seen Ferrell hit a drive that was a beauty—270 yards down the fairway—but because it had a little fade on the end of it, he'd scream. He'd take his driver and bring it down on the iron tee-marker and smash it to smithereens.

"I played with him one day when he broke all four wooden clubs he had bought before the match. It wasn't any of my business, but I just suggested to Wes that he still had some good irons left. He took a couple out of his bag and wrapped 'em around a tree just for the heck of it. I'd like to have what it costs him a year for his golf."

Ferrell and all of his club-throwing antics have yet, however, to tie the record of a Washington baseball writer who also is addicted to golf. On an occasion at Biloxi, Miss., the writer was so disgusted with his slice into the tall weeds that he hurled his club after the ball. The ball was recovered without much trouble, but an entire foursome and their caddies failed to find the club he threw.

Of course, Wes Ferrell, a short-tempered guy on the ball field and given to exploding at every bad turn in his luck, is the No. 1 example of how hectic golf can be. But in defense of Ferrell it must be related that his outbursts on the links are rarely directed at his playing partner. That could always be used about him in baseball, too. When he was angry out there on the mound, he was angry only at Wes Ferrell.

The best Ferrell golfing story we know was told by Paul Waner, his partner in a match a few years ago. They were playing for a fizable bet and the match was even on the seventeenth tee. Waner was out of bounds with his drive, and Ferrell had a chance to take a commanding lead. Then he bobbled his own drive, topping the ball only 50 yards down the fairway.

"Whereupon," relates Waner, "Wes threw his driver away and then looked for something else to heave after it. He couldn't find anything, so he laid himself down on the tee and actually started banging his head against the wooden marker. Then he turned to me and said:

"'Paul, if I kill myself on this thing, you'll find the money I owe you in my hip pocket.'"

NATS' ROOKIE PARADE

At Orlando Camp

(This is the second of a series of sketches on rookie ball players seeking positions with the Nats at the Orlando training camp.)

Two—Walter Masterson, Pitcher.

On an afternoon last May, an 18-year-old kid who had pitched only one full game in organized baseball was sent to the mound by Manager Bucky Harris for his first big league start. The Detroit Tigers were his opposition. He held the Tigers to six hits, beat them, 4 to 1.

It appeared that the Nats had discovered a pitching gem. But young Walter Masterson didn't make good. By the end of the season he was almost thoroughly discredited. Never did he approach the form of his big league debut. His fast ball strangely vanished and his control was unspeakable.

The mystery of Masterson's case is prompting the Nats to give him another try-out. It is difficult for Manager Bucky Harris to forget the fast ball the lad showed him in spring training last season and in that one superb performance against Detroit. On the chance that Masterson may recover his stuff, he is still with the Nats.

Washington plucked him from the Philadelphia sandlots two years ago. Harris thought so highly of him that he was retained with the club in the late months of 1938, although he did not pitch a ball. He liked the "action" of the tall, dark Irish lad whose father is a civil service worker in the Bureau of Navigation.

At one period last season, when Masterson's control suddenly vanished, Harris suggested that the lad visit an oculist. Glasses were immediately prescribed and the boy is now wearing spectacles.

He's on a special diet, too, in an effort to put more flesh on his 6-foot 2-inch frame. On the day that he weighs 180 pounds and succeeds in curing a strange timidity on the mound, Harris believes he will be a big league pitcher. This much is certain: He's the worst hitter ever to take a bat to the plate in the big leagues.

Pimlico Track Lost $16,387, Report Shows

Special Dispatch to The Post

Baltimore, Feb. 19.—While the official report of the Maryland Racing Commission to the Governor is for the most part a recording of figures which have been published, there are a few items of news in it and one of these is alarming to persons who follow the thoroughbred sport closely in this State.

That particular item concerns the financial standing of the Maryland Jockey Club, operating Pimlico, for the 1939 season. The commission report shows that Pimlico, generally accepted as the leader of Maryland's four major tracks, wound up the year just $16,387.97 short of breaking even.

The figure is bad, not only for the track, but for the State which has a 15 per cent tax on the net revenue of racing associations. Since Pimlico showed a loss, there can be no tax on net revenue.

Pimlico's trouble may be traced to two things. One is the extra tax burden faced by the Maryland Jockey Club each year, as compared to the other tracks. Pimlico pays $3,000 per day, or $75,000 per year to the treasury of Baltimore County, in addition to the $6,000 daily license fee to the State. The other three tracks pay only the $6,000 daily.

The other factor in Pimlico's loss is the weather. Last spring it rained on Preakness day, which is the big day of the year out at the Rogers avenue course and when it rains, business falls far below what the figures would reach with weather clear and track fast.

Colorado Grid Team Demands Coach Be Fired

By the United Press

Boulder, Colo., Feb. 19.—Colorado University regents admitted tonight that the school's "Big Seven" championship football team had petitioned for the immediate discharge of Coach Bernard F. (Bunny) Oakes.

Staff member of the Silver and Gold, student publication, said the petition was signed by 35 players and, in 13 pages, made three specific charges against Oakes.

The charges were that he constantly violated the two-hour practice limit; kickel the players during practice sessions, and that players who resigned from the squad last season because of differences with Oakes lost jobs which were putting them through school.

The student reporters said the petition also alleged that Oakes played men not in good physical condition, did not give his squad a Christmas vacation before the Cotton Bowl game in 1937, and "did not consider the fact that his players were students and football is an extra-curricular activity."

Oakes, who was voted the "complete confidence" of the board of regents last October after his team lost three games, said merely: "I have no comment to make at this time."

He is under a five-year contract at $5,000 annually ending in 1942. He coached the All-America Byron (Whizzer) White to football prominence and was given his new contract two years ago after his championship team, led by White, lost to Rice in the Cotton Bowl.

Washington A.A. Meets Tonight at Force School

The steering committee of the Washington A. A. will meet tonight at the Force School, 1740 Massachusetts avenue, at 8 o'clock with Dick Tennyson, of the District Recreation Department, presiding. Committees to conduct adult athletic programs will be selected.

Sammy Snead Takes Western Open Lead

By the Associated Press

Houston, Tex., Feb. 19.—While the National Open champion quit in disgust, Sammy Snead, the young West Virginia slammer, punctured par to take the second-round lead in the Western Open golf tournament today.

One of five men who came below par 71, Snead blew around the River Oaks course in 69 strokes. He combined that with his 75 of yesterday for a 143 two-day total.

Slippery greens handicapped the players and Byron Nelson, the national champion and defending titleholder, gave up when he missed a 2-foot putt on No. 10.

"I've missed 12 putts that I should have made in the last 28 holes," he groaned.

He had turned the first nine in 40, and probably could not have qualified for tomorrow's rounds.

Snead birdied five holes and sank numerous long putts, winding up at No. 18 by holing a 25-footer.

Alone in second place was Clayton Heafner, Linville, N. C. A smooth 36—36—72 gave him a two-day total of 144.

Three men were tied for third place at 145—Ralph Guldahl, of Dallas, who won the title three years in a row before Nelson won it six months ago; Jack Grout, Mamaroneck, N. Y., and Harold (Jug) McSpaden, Winchester, Mass., pro, who won the Houston open over the same layout last year.

Guldahl, the first man to break par today, had 34—35—69; Grout, 30—34—70, and McSpaden, 35—36—71.

The sixth place spot was jammed by Lloyd Mangrum, of Chicago, whose 35—36—71 gave him 146; Jimmy Demaret, Houston pro and darling of the gallery, with 36—38—74; Tony Penna, of Dayton, Ohio, 35—36—71, and Leonard Dodson, of Kansas City, 34—34—68.

Nevers said he planned to return to Stanford to work on a physical education degree.

George Washington Was 'First In Fishing,' Too, Diary Indicates

Entries From 1749-99 Show He Was Leader in Commercial Fishery on Potomac

By Charles E. Jackson

Acting Commissioner, Bureau of Fisheries, United States Department of the Interior

George Washington was not only "First in War and First in Peace," but his diary, according to entries for the years between 1748 and 1799, clearly indicates that he was one of the first to operate a commercial fishery on the Potomac River. He employed a considerable number of people in he fishery near his Mount Vernon estate, carefully observed the weather conditions, and its effect on the catch, kept tab on the supply and demand for fish in the markets.

JACKSON

Early in April, 1787, for example, he noted:

"The shad began to run today, having caught 100, 200 and 300 at a draught." Then on April 20.:

"Many fish caught today. No demand for them; salting them up."

Just as fishermen at the height of the runs today find the markets glutted and prices low, so did George Washington in 1787, when the catch was extremely good, find it difficult to market his catch. So he preserved them for winter use. He frequently refers to his fish house, a building probably used for storage of nets and equipment and for salting his surplus catch. His diary entry at the conclusion of the spring fishing season on May 5, 1788, shows that he employed people to haul seines and do other work:

"No fish being caught today, I ordered the Hogsheads, and everything else to be secured, and the

Still Unsigned, Lombardi Off for Reds Camp Today

LOMBARDI

Lombardi, who planned to reach the Florida city in about five days, said he would discuss contract terms when he arrived.

He said he was in good physical condition and laughingly admitted his big aim was "to lead the National League in hitting this season.

Mamakos Beats Luftspring Again In Toronto Fight

Mamakos had beaten Luftspring recently in New York, and started off strongly tonight, using a left jab and right cross hook effectively.

Luftspring came back in later rounds as Mamakos tired, but the winner had piled up enough points to win comfortably. Luftspring weighed 151, Mamakos 151½.

Valentin Campolo Upset at Newark

Newark, N. J., Feb. 19 (U.P.).—Jack Marshall, of Dallas, Tex., ruined Valentin Campolo's United States heavyweight campaign tonight when he took an upset 10-round decision over the big Argentine invader at Laurel Gardens, after flooring Valentin several times.

Marshall, a wild-swinging, aggressive mauler, spotted Campolo 28 pounds, but carried the fight to the Argentine throughout. Marshall, bleeding steadily from a reopened gash in his left brow, floored the invader six times and won all but the sixth round.

Campolo, who had knocked out big Jim Robinson, of Philadelphia, in his United States debut three weeks ago, was the 8-5 favorite over Marshall, who lost his first Eastern start February 9 to Bill Poland, of New York, on a six-round decision.

D. C. Net Star Loses To Budge in Miami

Miami Beach, Fla., Feb. 19 (AP).—Red-headed Lloyd Budge sprang a mild upset today by eliminating roly-poly Vincent Richards, of New York, 6—4, 6—4, in the $2,500 professional tennis tournament here.

Other favorites, including Lloyd's younger brother, Don Budge, top-ranking professional, had a merry time. Don brushed aside Dan Watson, of Washington, D. C., 6—2, 6—4.

G. W. Slightly Favored to Beat Terps for D. C. Title Tonight

College Park Is Scene of 8:15 Game

Colonials' Defeat By West Virginia Lowers Odds; Ace Scorers to Oppose

All but removed from the running for a berth in the Invitational National Championship Tournament at New York by their upset defeat by West Virginia, George Washington's courtmen hope to take it out on Maryland tonight at College Park in their battle for the local title.

Maryland and George Washington both boast victories over Georgetown which, in turn, has twice defeated American University so the winner of tonight's game, starting at 8:15, will have a clear-cut claim to the District championship.

The Colonials were rated strong favorites over the inconsistent Terrapins until Saturday when they were beaten badly at West Virginia, while Maryland was scoring an impressive victory over Catholic University.

Game Rated a Tossup

Now the game seems more-or less a tossup with a slight edge to George Washington. The Colonials frequently this season have looked like the best five ever to represent the G street school and should they have a good night they may rout Maryland. On the other hand if Maryland is clicking and G. W. isn't it may be the Colonials who take a bad licking.

Regardless of the result, the game should be a high-scoring affair between two quick-breaking teams which place more stress on offense than defense. Maryland probably will use a zone defense and George Washington a man-for-man defense. However, if the Colonials get away in the lead the Terps most likely will discard the zone and use man-for-man tactics themselves.

Leading Scorers Clash

Also pitted in this game will be most of the District's leading college point scorers. Maryland's basket-finding ace is lanky George DeWitt, George Washington's is little Reds Auerbach. Capably supporting DeWitt will be Mearle DuVall, sophomore forward star; Bill Mulitz, unspectacular but steady guard, and Pershing Mondorff, another guard who occasionally breaks out with a large case of scoring rash.

Though Auerbach leads his mates in pumping through points, any player on the team is likely to pop up as the scoring star. When Auerbach has been shackled Capt. George Garber or Matt Zunic or Joe Comer usually rises to the occasion with an inspired performance.

Golden Gloves Winners Dinner Guests Tonight

Thirty-one amateur fighters, the winners and the runners-up in the seventh annual Golden Gloves boxing tournament, will be honor guests tonight at a banquet in the Ambassador Hotel at which miniature gloves and silver belt buckles will be awarded.

Officials of the District Boxing Commission, the A. A. U. and local newspapermen will take a hand in the proceedings and give a send-off to the eight senior winners who will represent the Capital in Eastern championships, March 4-6 in Madison Square Garden.

Motion pictures of the final bouts of the tournament will be shown by Gloves Chairman James A. Sullivan, and L. Gordon Leech will be master of ceremonies. Johnny Rogers, 160-pound National Guard senior champion, will get the gold trophy as the outstanding senior fighter.

The senior championship in the 126-pound class, yet to be decided between Gilbert Mayo and Willie Tapp, will be determined February 28 when Frankie Mann promotes the fight as the top bout on an amateur card sponsored by the St. Aloysius Church Boosters Club at Gonzaga Hall. Those who will be honored are:

Penn State Five Favored Over G.U. Tomorrow

Towering Lions One Of Biggest Teams; Nine Six-Footers

One of the biggest college teams in the country will be on exhibition tomorrow night at Tech gym when Penn State turns loose its towering players against Georgetown University in an 8:30 o'clock game.

Nine of 14 invaders stand better than 6 feet and their average weight is 178 pounds. Outstanding scorer for the visitors is John Barr, 6-foot 2-inch and 205-pound junior, who has made 134 points in his team's 15 games. The Lions' second top point producer is Clifton McWilliams, 6-foot 4-inch center, who scales 205 pounds.

Other strapping Penn State players are Bob Crowell, 6 feet 1, 182 pounds; Dick Grimes, 6 feet 1, 180 pounds; Sanford Kranich, 6 feet 4, 210 pounds; Norman Ruscin, 6 feet 3, 178 pounds, and Howard Smith, 6 feet 1, 170 pounds.

Penn State, by virtue of its 9 victories in 15 games, including decisive triumphs over Army, Navy and Rutgers, will be heavily favored over the Hoyas, who will be minus the service of George Pajak, high scoring forward. Pajak is out for the season with a fractured arm.

In Pajak's place will be started one of two sophomores, Jim Kiernan or Don Martin. Both are well regarded as shooters, though neither is an accomplished floor player.

The Angel's Finder Will Appear on Thursday's Card

Carl Pojello, who holds the dubious honor of being the discoverer of The Angel, latest gift to the wrestling oddities, will also appear on the Thursday night card, which features his protege and Alan Eustace in the feature attraction.

Pojello will meet Jim Coffield. His story is that he first saw The Angel, otherwise known as Maurice Tillett, in Singapore and was so taken by his strength and peculiar build that he induced him to come to America.

"When I first saw The Angel, I couldn't believe my eyes," Pojello told Promoter Joe Turner. "His head is at least a foot and a half long, and all his power seems centered there."

Modest Hoya Soph Credits Coach Hardell For His Improvement

By Jack Munhall.

Not at all affected by his success and the attendant national publicity, Al Blozis, the gigantic Georgetown sophomore who Saturday smashed Jack Torrance's world indoor shotput record, returned to school yesterday and declined to make any predictions for the future.

Reminded that his new indoor mark of 53 feet 8¼ inches is less than 3 feet below Torrance's world outdoor record of 57 feet 1 inch, Blozis was asked if he believed he might establish a new outdoor standard this spring.

"I'm making no predictions," the blond, good looking Lithuanian replied with a crafty smile. "Then I won't have to live up to them. I'm just going to keep plugging along and trying to improve. My goal? I haven't set any."

Then with his customary modesty, the 6-foot-6-inch 245-pound youngster who is expected to win All-American football honors as a tackle before leaving the Hilltop, gave most of the credit for his record to the coaching of Hap Hardell.

"Hap has shown me how to improve my speed and timing," he explained, "and that, plus my temper, I believe, is responsible for the new record."

"Where did my temper come in?" he repeated a question. "Well, Frank Ryan caused that. I had expected to win up there at New York and until Ryan stepped up to break Torrance's record for the first time, it looked as though I would. But there Ryan had thrown one farther than I ever had, 53 feet 3¾ inches, and I was plenty sore. I was determined to beat the guy if I had to throw my arm along with the shot."

Hardell's role in developing Blozis is not spectacular. Few things connected with this reticent but popular little coach are. At the start of the season when he began his coaching career at the Hilltop, Hardell walked up to Blozis and thrust a stack of books into his tremendous hands.

"These are good books on the art of shot-putting, Al," he said, "with action pictures of the world's best shot-putters. Read them thoroughly and study the pictures carefully and see if you notice anything that might help you."

Blozis followed instructions and sure enough reaped some benefits. By comparison of his delivery with those of the stars pictured in the books, Blozis discovered his preliminary motions were faulty, which explained why he felt "off balance" just before he released the shot.

"The main thing I learned from the books was to keep my front or left foot on the ground instead

Navy Gridmen Start Spring Practice March 4

Special Dispatch to The Post

Annapolis, Md., Feb. 19.—Starting March 4 or 5, Navy spring football practice will last a shorter period than usual and bring out a squad much reduced in size from last season. It will be directed by Maj. Emery (Swede) Larson, head coach last year, who will continue in that position next season.

Maj. Larson said that the regular practice period would last for three weeks, and that there might be a week or two more for those who wish it, and there would be as little interference with spring sports as possible.

Marines Set All-Time Mark At Arcade

Roll High Team Game Of 662 in Navy League; Other Records Fall

An all-time league record and the year's second high individual game were rolled last night at the Arcade Alleys. The all-time mark was set in the Navy League by the Marine Barracks rollers with a high game of 662, while the game mark was made by Pat Collins, of the National Capital Parks rollers in the Federal Men's League. He rolled a 170 game.

The Marine team also had a high of 1,750. Magee, of Yards and Docks, had 154 high game, and Beall, of the Bureau of Engineering, had high set of 398.

In the Federal League Paul Perkins, of Senate, had 403 high set. Comptroller of Currency had 653 high team game, and G. P. O. had 1,837 high team set.

ICE PALACE

A season record was rolled by the Tugs, in the Maritime Ladies League, with a 489 game and a 1,380 set. Edith Biggs had a 115 high game, and Hylma Poole, 304 high set.

Bill Duryee, of Blustein No. 2, had 169 high game, and Rex Weaver had 433 high set in the Jewelers League. Blustein had high game and set, 628—1,708. In the Chamber of Commerce League, Roy Soul, of the Indians, took game and set honors with 148—377, while the Arrows took team honors with 530—1,540.

LUCKY STRIKE

Two season records were hung up in the Kilowatt League competition. Bill Lanahan, rolling for the Sub Stations, turned in a high game of 190 to break the old mark, and Paul Rittenhouse, of the Station Engineers, took high set honors with a 459 for the other record.

High team game and set honors of the night went to Transit with 625 and 1,795.

In the Electric League, Johnny Anderson was high man of the night with a game score of 141 and a set of 377.

H. Coke, of Merkle Co., won high game in the Graphic League with a 149. Bill Beatty, of Judd & Dettweiler, took the set honor with 397. Dettweiler took both high team game and set honors with 590 and 1,738.

In the Procurement League, J. J. McMahon won high game and set with 140 and 368, respectively. Aztecs took high team game and set with 574 and 1,679.

Y. M. C. A. Five Sets Mark in 81-13 Victory

The Y. M. C. basketball team set a scoring record on its own court last night by nosing out the Interstate Commerce Commission five, 81 to 13, in a fast game—at least fast from the "Y" standpoint.

Some indication of what was to come was given when the winners ran up the score to a 33-8 situation at half-time. Jim Watkins, Metropolitan policeman, led things by scoring 25 points, and Dan O'Connell, was runner-up with 18.

Eastern High Faces Crucial Battle Today

Teams Fighting to Gain Chance at High Court Championship

Still champion, by virtue of its undefeated march to the 1939 inter-high basketball championship, Eastern's faltering five comes to the game that will make or break its chances of successfully defending its crown today. At 3:30 the Tide, with an up and down record behind it, meets Woodrow Wilson in the first half of the last regular double-header of the season at Eastern gym.

The last half will be supplied by Central and Tech, the only importance attached to the clash being whether Central must go into a playoff for one of the four title tourney places, or be conceded that place without further ado.

If Eastern wins, no matter what the outcome of the Central-Tech battle, a playoff will be necessary and it was in such a last-ditch playoff that Central lost out last year. Central's best bet will be to win its own game, thus putting it along with Roosevelt out of range of playoffs. Though still able to cause considerable grief, Tech will be playing purely for the fun of it today. The Manual Trainers, along with Anacostia, have no chance at a tournament berth.

Despite the respective standings of Wilson and Eastern at present, the Tide must be rated a strong favorite. This is a result of Wilson's miserable showing against Central and Eastern's contrastingly brilliant effort against Western. The champs appear to be rounding into form while Wilson has grown steadily worse since a hot streak before the Christmas holidays.

Central also should win. It's unorthodox style has baffled most of the best clubs in the series at one time or another. The only speaking point for Tech is that it will be playing without any worry as to the outcome. So far the Maroon Midgets have "choked up" in their important outings.

Three other games of interest mark the day's card. Bethesda and Washington-Lee furnish the only night action at Arlington, while afternoon games feature Woodward at St. Albans and Friends at Rockville.

District Golf Tourney Card Is Approved

The executive committee of Columbia Country Club yesterday approved the city tournament schedule for the coming year and the same intercity team player plan in use last year, which had eight players on the first team, six on the second, and four on the third.

The tourney program starts with the Keefer competition in May at Chevy Chase, and the Star Class A and B tourneys the same month at Congressional and at the Capital Golf and Country Club. The District championship play will be in June at Kenwood, with the Times-Herald cups later in the month at Manor and Chevy Chase.

The Corby tournament, at Columbia, and the duffers' play at Beaver Dam, will be held in September, as will The Washington Post Class A and B tournaments, which will be at Woodmont and Kenwood, respectively. The N. B. C. tourney will be held in October at Army-Navy.

On the Line

With CONSIDINE

New York, Feb. 19.—Of all things:

Our friendly neighbor, Nicaragua, has illicitly flooded the country with Nicaraguan Sweepstakes Tickets, with a payoff on the outcome of the Widener Cup Race at Hialeah. The New York State Legislator, Phelps Phelps, who is crusading for a U. S. lottery working out of New York, estimates that 1,500,000 of the Nicaraguan tickets, along with the usual percentage of counterfeits, have been sold in New York.

CONSIDINE

Last time we wrote a sweepstakes piece, proving through the testimony of a former (and reputable) employe that two out of every three Irish Hospitals Sweepstakes tickets were counterfeit, that $1.50 of each $2.50 went to salesmen and wholesalers, that only two bits got to the hospital, and there was something highly suspicious about the distribution of the prizes, we got mail for months from suckers who wanted to know where they could buy one. Made us remember that old one about, ". . . well, it's the only wheel in town, isn't it?"

Dan Ferris, the A. A. U. official, was called to the phone the other day with word that there was a collect call for him, from Helsinki. Dan, wondering if one of his Olympic athletes had arrived ahead of the 1940 Olympics and gotten bombed, accepted the expensive call. For a couple of minutes he listened to what sounded like double-talk to him, with some references to "do you want me to go to the Ladoga action, or stay north," etc. Dan finally stopped him and asked what the hell it was all about.

Develops that it was an I.N.S. war reporter, and that he got Ferris instead of his news service chief, Barry Faris.

Al (Rummy) Davis, the sinister young tough who fights Lou Ambers, lightweight champ, in an over-the-weight match Friday night, claims as his last two victims two men who had never before been kayoed—Tony Canzoneri and Tippy Larkin. Ambers has never been knocked out either. Lou isn't much of a fighter in those over-the-weight matches, but he ought to be good enough to Bummy miss. He'd better make him miss, for the tough is murder with a left hook.

Bummy is in the toils of litigation now, for slugging a neighbor, litigation which has brought out testimony that indicates that he isn't legally old enough to fight a main event in New York. Another neighbor of his was telling us the other day that one of Bummy's playful bits of mischief these days is to clear his troat and let one go on his listener's coat, and if the guy gets sore he also gets socked. Johnny Attel, Davis' manager, says this is not true; that Bummy is good to his folks, a perfect gentleman, and that people are purposely taunting him to hit them, since he got in the dough, so they can sue him for assault. Sounds like Ring Lardner's great story, "Champion."

George V. Riley, whom any big league ball player and traveling baseball writer will tell you is the best hotel man in the country, bids good-by tonight to New York, when he is the guest of honor at a large party at the New Yorker. He becomes vice president of the "Roosevelt" in New Orleans March 15.

Those pictures of flabby Brooklyn ball players lying like albino sea-cows on the dressing tables at Clearwater are about as pretty as a bad accident. By and large, ball players allow themselves to get more out of shape than any other type of athlete. For some reason we particularly resent those current fatties. Babe Ruth got fat between seasons, too, but there was something there when they whittled him down. What's underneath the suet of these other guys, except suet?

My favorite correspondent, Ben "Evil Eye" Finkle, world's greatest hexer, urgently postcards from Miami: "Have arrived in town for Conn-Lesnevitch match. Pray Dan Parker is getting better and gets well. Best luck to you, family, Dan Dick and rest. Won my first one with Ben Brown, Fort Lauderdale, Fla. The Honest Brakeman said hello."

Everybody knows that the fine young colt Bimelech got his name from a friend of Ed Bradley's named Abimelech, the Old Testament character. Bradley dropped the A because he names all of his horses with words beginning with B. But Frank Menke adds this: The Yiddish expression for "be careful" is "by-me-lek." It might be a sign. Tons of money will be burned up on Bimelech if he does what every Belmont Futurity Winner, and about every winter book favorite has done, to wit, fail to win the Kentucky Derby.

Early Settler, Arcaro Up, Wins Hialeah Park Feature

Lackawanna Closes Fast For Second

Transmitter Beaten For Place; Winner Pays Backers $9.20; 14,000 See Races

By the Associated Press

Hialeah Park, Fla., Feb. 19.—Early Settler, recently victorious in a 7-furlong event over the main track for Owner W. C. Winfrey, switched to the grass course here today and led home nine other above-the-average platers in the sixth race, nameless mile and one-sixteenth feature of the card. Eddie Arcaro was astride the 6-year-old, which reported a length on top in 1:48 3-5 to pay the talent $9.20 for $2.

J. F. Quinn's Lackawanna closed a big gap to finish second, two lengths in advance of the Knollwood Stable's Transmitter.

The program that inaugurated the final two weeks of the meeting was riddled with scratches as a result of intermittent rains that fell Saturday night and Sunday, the footing was gradually drying out on top, aided by a warm sun. With the exception of the feature and the first race, small fields prevailed.

One of the largest week-day crowds on record filled the stands. More than 14,000 fans visited the Miami Jockey Club's course, despite the lack of an outstanding feature.

Transmitter went out to set the pace but was replaced by Balloter after the first quarter mile. Early Settler, meanwhile, was back in the middle of the bunch. Balloter was three lengths clear of Transmitter starting around the last bend, but when Arcaro clucked to Early Settler, the Winfrey colorbearer spurted and put the leaders away in short order. He had plenty left when the courageous Lackawanna made his late rally.

Success of Ice Follies of 1940 Due to Talented Young Stars

Many of Featured Performers Still in Teens; Chorus of 24 Girls Averages 19 Years of Age

Youth is well served in the Ice Follies now playing at Riverside Stadium, for this musical ice revue prominently features many young champions of the speed and figure skating ranks. Much of the success of the show is due to the constant stream of fresh talent recruited each year, according to Producers Oscar Johnson and Eddie Shipstad, who built their first production four years ago around young amateurs.

At the head of the list of youthful stars in the cast are Ruby and Bobby Maxson, 18 and 19, brother and sister who first drew notice by holding the Northwest junior pair figure title for several years. Then there are Gordon and Gilbert McKellen, 19 and 20 year old brother act, featured for the past two years.

The McKellens took their acrobatic talents to the ice after winning the Michigan State A. A. U. tumbling championship. They joined the Follies direct from high school in Muskegon where they were all-round scholastic athletes.

Featured for the first time this year is Osborne Colson, still in his early twenties who was junior figure skating champion of Canada in 1934 and senior champion in 1935, 1936, 1937. He is paired with Frances Claudet, another brilliant young Canadian who starred in the 1932 Olympics and went on to win Canada's highest figure skating honor the Canadian Gold Medal, in 1936.

Olympus Eats Oranges, Makes His Own Bed

By the Associated Press

Miami, Fla., Feb. 19.—Pithy paddock prattle as Florida's hoss racing nears its peak:

Regardless of how the Nation's business is faring, Miami's various sports enterprises are streaking along like Glenn Cunningham before he was consigned to the old men's home by the experts . . . especially Hialeah and the Hi-Li (Jai-Alai) . . . both places may have to begin arrangements for greater seating capacity after this season . . . Hialeah Park's attendance is up 8 per cent over last year, with daily crowds around 12,000 (turnstile count) and more, and betting is higher by at least 15 per cent over a year ago.

A Smart Horse

Olympus and oranges: The horse that won the London Cup in England before being shipped back to this country last fall, seems to have come to the right place—he loves oranges . . . but the odd part is that Olympus spits out the pits . . . who said horses have no sense? . . . he also paws his own straw around in his stall, arranging it so that most of it will be in the spot where he likes to flop down and roll around . . . Olympus is the first horse that appears among the many nominations for the $50,000 Widener Challenge Cup in the stake book, which is what you might call a hunch.

"Sunny Jim" Fitzsimmons, who trained the 5-year-old chestnut for William Woodward prior to his recent sale to the Chicago-owned Barrington Stable, admitted that Olympus hardly could hope to cope with Challedon, who has been declared out of the Widener since then, but he added that the Gallant Fox horse had a good chance to defeat just about all of the others . . . Incidentally, the sale of Olympus and the unfortunate cutting down of the well-regarded 3-year-old, Foxleigh, in his American debut at Hialeah a few days ago, leaves Woodward with virtually no worthwhile candidate for the Widener and Flamingo stakes.

NO ENDING, going in his best form, responded to pressure in the final 3 furlongs and drew out through the stretch. PLAY MAY circled the field after leaving the backstretch and made a bold effort, but could not overtake the winner. WISE DECISION outlasted FUMBLE in the final drive. The latter had no excuse.

Daily Double, MAEDIXIE and NO ENDING, Paid $182.90.

THIRD RACE—Six furlongs. Purse, $1,100. For maiden 3-year-olds. Start good. Won easily; place driving. Went to post at 3:01. Off at once. Winner, Woolford Farm's b. f. by Insco—Dancing Spirit. Trained by R. O. Higdon. Value to winner, $775; second, $175; third, $100; fourth, $50. Time, 1:15⅘.

Philadelphia Co., Proposes to Write Off Large Loss

Pittsburgh, Feb. 19 (AP).—The Philadelphia Co. proposes to write off a loss of at least $23,000,000 in the reorganization of its subsidiaries, Pittsburgh railways and motor coach companies, notices of a stockholders' meeting March 12 disclosed today.

The plan provides for a reduction in the value of the subsidiaries from $52,874,794 to approximately $29,800,000 and creation of a reserve fund of $23,000,000 for "revalution of assets" of the carriers.

The Federal Securities and Exchange Commission has approved financial changes necessary to establish the reserve fund, but in an order January 30 expressed doubt that the reserve of $23,000,000 would prove adequate to cover the loss of the reorganization, now under way in Federal Court.

Palmolive Peet World Sales Set New High

otal of $101,935,438 In 1939 Is $1,370,273 Over 1929 Record

Jersey City, N. J., Feb. 19.—E. H. Little, president of the Colgate-Palmolive Peet Co., announced today the company's world-wide sales for 1939 were $101,935,438, the highest in the history of the company, and surpassing the previous high of $100,565,165 in 1929. The 1939 sales do not include those of the German, Italian and Polish subsidiaries which were included in previous years.

The company's profits for 1939, subject to the annual audit, amounted to $6,623,654 as compared with $4,921,921 for 1938, Little said. the 1939 profits, the highest since 1931, equaled $2.74 a share of common stock after provision for preferred dividends, and compares with $1.77 per common share in 1938. Dividends of $1 a share of common stock were paid in 1939, consisting of regular quarterly payments of 12½ cents, plus an extra dividend of 50 cents.

Earned surplus at December 31, 1939, amounted to $12,688,825, an increase of $3,034,450 for the year. Current assets of $44,747,708, including $14,865,604 cash and marketable securities, exceeded current liabilities by $33,020,410.

During the year, $8,285,000 of 6 per cent preferred stock was called or purchased with Treasury funds, and in January, 1940, an additional $2,520,000 was called for redemption on April 1, thereby reducing the amount outstanding to $12,500,000 which it is proposed to refund.

A special meeting of common stockholders has been called for March 15, to consider amendments to the certificate of incorporation necessary to carry out a proposed plan for the sale of 125,000 shares of a new class of preferred stock with a dividend rate not in excess of $4.50 per share, and the redemption of the remaining 125,000 shares of the company's present 6 per cent preferred stock. Proxy statements were mailed to stockholders today.

Since the election of Little as president in April, 1939, the company has purchased or called for redemption $11,848,500 of its 6 per cent preferred stock. If the remaining $12,500,000 is refunded with a 4½ per cent issue as proposed, it will mean a total annual savings in preferred dividends since the program was started of $898,000 or 45 cents a share of common stock.

Cotton Closes Unchanged To 4 Points Down

New York, Feb. 19 (AP).—Cotton futures dropped 50 cents a bale today before buying power took hold. The list closed unchanged to 20 cents, or 4 points, down.

The market stumbled over the hurdle of foreign selling and an easier Liverpool market at the outset. The overseas offerings weren't especially vigorous (Bombay was closed for a holiday), and trade and speculative accounts were even more apathetic.

When pressure finally relented price refixing became more active and short holders of the March delivery covered more freely. The spot month moved up to 11.04 cents a pound, top for the recovery under way for the last month or so. Selling by a large spot interest kept the rally from getting out of hand.

Worth street reported a number of bids had appeared in textile markets at ⅛ cent a yard below mill asking prices. Although most mills refused to make concessions, some cloth men declared any price shading might result in a sizable buying move.

Cottonseed oil futures lost 5 to 6 points today, influenced by the decline in lard and another heavy run of hogs.

Transferring operations dominated trade. Refiners bought nearby months against sales of distants, while commission houses were on the other end of the deals. Early buyers turned to the selling side. However Sales totaled 135 lots: March, 6.98; May, 7.10 bid; July, 7.30 bid; September, 7.27; October, 7.30.

Crude oil was steady at a nominal price of 6 cents a pound in the Southeast and Valley after scattered sales at that level over the week-end. Texas was 5¾@5⅞ bid.

Spotlight Shines on News of the British Government's Decision to Liquidate Its Nationals Holdings of U. S. Securities

New York, Feb. 19.—The financial district had plenty to feed upon today, but it didn't fatten up enough to tempt a slaughterhouse. Being required to stick to the record, we must say that the fluctuation of the composite average, which is supposed to measure the passions of the financial district, showed almost no change. It was off 0.05 point in trading of 633,410 shares, and that is far less than the required amount for an investigation.

The small amount of the net change for the day might lead some of the uninitiated to believe that all was quiet in Wall Street today, as the SEC would have it, but such was not the case. For Wall Street had to contemplate and ponder on the decision of the British government to sequester the holdings of its nationals in United States securities, such sequestering being for the purpose of regulating the liquidation of such securities on this market and thus raising sufficient money with which to purchase war materials needed in the pursuance of the European war.

Foreign Liquidtaion Expected

Wall Street has long been aware of foreign liquidation. It is one of the things which has kept our market from breaking out of its rut. For after the bulge of the last quarter of 1939, it was apparent that on every increase of prices for our stocks and bonds there would come another wave of this foreign liquidation.

There is no reason why anybody should become particularly excited about this. Wall Street today decided it would not get excited, and hence the irregularly lower movement in quiet trading. For we have had this foreign liquidation ever since the outbreak of war in September, and the fact now that the same liquidation i sto be under Government control makes no practical difference.

Only 60 Issues Affected

The British action commandeered holdings of her nationals in only 60 American issues. This was the prime subject of conversation in Wall Street today, even though it had little observable effect upon the market.

The particular issues sequestered did little market-wise to distinguish them from the rest of the list and the British action did nothing to stimulate general activity.

American brokers were right on the spot when it came to soliciting the business of the British treasury in liquidating the stocks it is soon to own. A delegation representing American firms in London called on treasury officials and offered their services, pointing out that they have a perfect record of cooperation with authorities and have done much to facilitate the easy flow of business between London and New York.

Signals New Payment Method

The Street felt the primary significance of the move lay in signaling a future change in the British method of payment for American exports. So far during the war England has shipped gold to pay for most of the products going to strengthen her domestic economy and equip her war machine. The United States has far more gold than can reasonably be used, however, and has said that payment in securities would be preferred. Though little can be bought with the proceeds from the sale of these sixth issues, many more securities are expected to be added as the war continues.

Trading today was featured by the action of a few specialties. Loft led the list in point of activity and on a gain of 1⅝ went to a new high. Martin-Parry was next and likewise went to a new top on a gain of 1⅜ points. United Air Lines was the most active of the aviations, with a good gain, and support continued for the tractions. Metals broke into the active list and generally they carried plus signs.

Among the commodities wheat followed an irregular course with a rally offsetting an early loss. The close was irregular with May off and July and September firm to slightly lower. Cotton closed near its highs for the day, up 7 to 8 points.

Bond Trading Quiet

Apart from rather spectacular advances in some of the Brooklyn-Manhattan transit group on city unification developments, bonds were generally quiet and somewhat easier in tone today.

B.-M. T. a Feature

The interest in the B.-M. T situation served to lift Brooklyn, Queens County & Suburban Consolidated 5s of 1941 8 points to a new high at 80, while the first 5s of 1941 also sold up 15 points to close at 85, compared with a previous high of 70.

The close in Treasurys on the big board was mixed with changes ranging from 4-32 point to up 4-32 point. In the outside market the late quotations were almost uniformly under the previous close. Trading in these issues on the stock exchange was about $61,000, against $128,000 on Friday, the previous full trading session.

Foreign Issues Lower

Foreign developments led to some weakness among Norwegian bonds, with new low levels reached by a few issues. Canadian loans also sold lower.

The average of 30 domestic bonds was off 0.11 point on the day with all groups participating in the decline. Then rails were sold down 0.12 point; five second grade rails, down 0.03 point; ten industrials, down 0.06 point and five utilities, down 0.02 point.

Wheat Sales Help Unsettle Grain Market

Profit Taking Offset By Short Covering And Mill Buying

By the Associated Press

Chicago, Feb. 19.—Marketing of wheat that has been tied up since last summer's harvest under Government loans helped to unsettle the grain market today, resulting in an irregular price movement.

May contracts, representing the 1939 crop, finished ⅛-½ cent lower than Saturday at $1.02¾@$1.02½, being affected partly by hedging sales in connection with purchases by commercial interests of loan wheat. Loans mature by April 30. Last week's price advance gave produces a more favorable margin over loan rates, encouraging redemption.

July and September contracts, representing the coming 1940 crop, closed unchanged to ¼ higher at $1.00⅞@$1.00¾ and $1.00½@$1.00⅜. Prices fluctuated nervously during the session over a range of almost 2 cents, having rallied from early net losses of about a cent to score corresponding gains at times.

The trend of prices in other pits also was unsettled. Corn closed ⅛ lower to ¼ higher, May, 56⅝@56¾; July, 57. Oats unchanged to ¼ down. Rye, ⅛@⅜ down and lard, 2@5 lower. Soy beans advanced about 2 cents at one stage, but closed ¾@⅞ net higher.

More moisture over the grain belt and forecast of continued unsettled weather in some localities tended to depress wheat. There was more profit-taking as a result of the Friday's bulge, but this was offset by short covering and mill buying and some apprehension over war news which helped to rally the market at ties.

Corn advanced with wheat at times, but failed to reflect the bread cereal's weakness whenever it appeared. Exporters bought scattered quantities and sales abroad were estimated at 250,000 bushels, but shipping business from here was light. Reports that the soy bean seed situation in Illinois, Indiana, Ohio and other States was unfavorable strengthened the bean market.

Foreign Markets

By the Associated Press

London, Feb. 19.—Strong demand for British government bonds straightened out the securities market today after early uncertainty. Industrial leaders shared the gains, especially those of investment caliber. Oils improved throughout the session and coppers tended upward. Profit-taking nipped oils and lack of support left kaffirs slightly lower. Dollar securities not affected by the requisition order tended downward.

Paris.—The bourse was in a rising trend today. The "resolute" attitude of Great Britain to the Altmark episode, brokers said, appeared the chief influence. Rentes closed 5 to 430 centimes higher, the dollar guaranteed issue entirely recovering the coupon detached in the previous session.

Amsterdam.—Losses running to 2 points predominated in the bourse today. American issues were irregular, with steels steady to a bit higher and rayons and rails lower.

Liverpool.—Tipped off by lower Far Eastern markets, cotton futures declined 11 to 14 points today.

Lockheed Gets $143,500 In Commercial Orders

Burbank, Calif., Feb. 19.—New commercial orders valued at approximately $143,500 were booked last week by the Lockheed Aircraft Corp, according to Carl B. Squier, vice president and sales manager.

Lockheed's present announced unfilled business is "nearly $60,000,000" and the bulk of recent orders have been from commercial customers, Squier said.

General Motors to Build Spark Plug Plant

Flint, Mich., Feb. 19 (AP).—L. Clifford Goad, general manager of AC Spark Plug Division of General Motors Corporation, announced today construction of a plant with 156,000 square feet of floor space would be started here immediately. Cost of the building is estimated at $1,500,000.

It will be used for spark plug manufacturing, Goad said, and space vacated in present facilities of the division will be available for expanded oil filter and bearing operations.

Foreign Exchange

New York, Feb. 19 (AP).—The British pound tacked into lower price ground in the foreign exchange market today. Several of the neutral currencies, however, improved their position in relation to the dollar. Sterling dipped ¾ of a cent and the French franc drew back .00½ of a cent in sympathy. The guilder and the belga were up .02 and .01 of a cent respectively while the Swiss franc was unchanged. Banking quarters said the release in American markets of domestic securities sequestered by Britain would be handled through official agencies and hence was of minor influence in exchange trade.

Wes Ferrell Gets All Balled Up at Training Camp

Russians Stall Rail Traffic For Germany

18,000 Cars Pledged In Pact, but Only 1,353 Have Passed

By Eugen Kovacs.

Copyright by New York Times

Orasheni, on the Rumanian-Russian Frontier, Feb. 19.—Before Sir William Seeds, British ambassador to Moscow, left for England by way of Bucharest, he was told by Vladimir Potemkin, Russian vice commissar for foreign affairs, that "the help Germany will get from Russia is much smaller than the British or the Germans themselves think."

How true that remark was I found here, on the former Polish-Rumanian and now the Russian-Rumanian frontier.

Orasheni is the starting point of the railway line which runs to Berlin over Russian territory. This is the only railway line on Russian territory which has a track of normal width. All the others, even those in Russian-occupied Poland, have been converted into the wide Russian gauge.

Traffic Impeded

According to the Russo-German railway agreement of last year, five trains of 60 cars each are supposed to travel daily, loaded one way, empty the other.

Since traffic on this line was inaugurated only 692 empty and 661 loaded cars had passed through, instead of 18,000. One can ascertain that the Russians are deliberately impeding traffic. They have been giving no end of trouble to the Germans right from the start.

They asked that the freight be paid for in dollars. They kept the loaded cars. The trains were plundered and long negotiations took place with regard to them. The Russians sent back transit merchandise bound for Scandinavia, and finally killed the traffic by the slow forwarding of the transports.

They Wait and Wait

A sample of the Russian methods at this border station is this: The Rumanian officials telephone to the Russians at 8 o'clock that there is a train ready to start. The Russians reply that they will be there at 10, whereupon Rumanian police are sent to the frontier on the bridge.

They wait and wait, and at last, at 1 o'clock, the Russian locomotive with a Russian staff makes its appearance.

Next the identity documents are checked—everything is done in silence—and the handing over of the train begins. At half-past four—for the Russians check everything unbelievably slowly—the train slowly moves out, but as it is dark by 5 o'clock no other train comes along with empty cars.

The proof that this is sabotage is the fact that in normal times 400 to 500 cars used to travel on this line to Poland and northern Europe, whereas today the traffic is nothing but a fake traffic.

Germans Send Own Cars

Corn, oilcakes, apples, eggs, butter, meat and lumber are the chief goods which go over this line. Not a single tank car has passed over it, for the Germans are afraid that the oil will be kept in Russia.

So far the Germans have sent over only German rail cars, since if they sent Polish ones the Russians would simply keep them, saying that they had captured them after the occupation.

Glamorous Diplomat . . .

One of two women in Mexico's foreign service is Senorita Carmine Baez, law graduate and one-time newspaper editor. Her appointment as third secretary of the Mexican Embassy adds a touch of glamour to Washington's Diplomatic Corps

Postlude

By Ray C. B. Brown.

St. John's Church presents a religious concert Monday night. Program: Bach's Church Cantatas Nos. 140 and 180: "Wachet auf, ruft uns die Stimme" and "Schmucke dich, o liebe Seele." Soloists: Katharine Harris, Raimonde Aubrey and Sam Cotton. Organist: Henry Kerr. Choirmaster: Arthur Howe.

A reverent and absorbed audience gathered last evening in the historic Church of St. John on Lafayette Square for the performance of two of Bach's cantatas by the choir of men and boys under the direction of Arthur Howe. It is in such circumstances, rather than in the pomp and allurement of the concert hall, that the church music of Bach should always be heard. Mundane trivialities distract one's attention from the essence of the compositions which were written for the purposes of worship.

The cantata, "Sleepers, Wake," was sung by the choir last season, and its repetition on this occasion afforded another opportunity to enjoy its serenity and loveliness. A prelude from this cantata has been transcribed in so many ways, and repeated so often in radio broadcasts, as to be in danger of becoming a musical commonplace. But no transcription can convey the charm of the manner in which the prelude is interwoven with the voices. When the chorus breaks in with "Zion Hears a Watchman Crying," the effect of the contrasting themes is unforgetable.

Bach's power of invention is nowhere more strikingly displayed than in his church cantatas, no two of which are identical in structure or in treatment. "Sleepers, Awake" has two accompanied choruses, two duets preceded by recitatives and a concluding chorale a cappella. The structure is pivoted on the duets between the mystical Bridegroom and Bride.

In the cantata, "Deck Thyself, My Soul, With Gladness," the opening chorus is immediately followed by an aria, "Arise, My Soul," that sets the emotional key for the composition. There are two more arias with introductory recitatives, maintaining the joyous exaltation with "What Longing Fills My Spirit" and "Sun of Life," and the closing unaccompanied chorale, "Jesu, Bread of Life From Heaven," leaves the auditor uplifted by the benediction of peace.

Arthur Howe was the choirmaster, whose training was evident in the clear part-singing. The assisting soloists were Katharine Harris, Raimonde Aubrey and Sam Cotton, and Henry Kerr was at the console of the organ.

Calvert Hall Loses, 39-38, to Little Hoyas

Decker and Barrett Score 13 Points To Head Attack

Georgetown Prep's basketball team trounced Calvert Hall of Baltimore, 39 to 19, yesterday at the Prep gym. It was the winners' second victory of the season over Calvert Hall. They previously won a 39-38 decision in Baltimore.

The game got off to a slow start, with both teams employing the zone defense. It was not until the last quarter that the Prepmen registered their decisive flurry of baskets.

In the first period the visitors' Beppo Squilace, Maryland all-scholastic guard, opened the scoring with a free toss, but the lead was short-lived as Sport Barrett, one of the better centers in schoolboy play, dropped in two baskets and from then on the hosts never were headed. The quarter ended 6-2 in favor of the Little Hoyas.

The home team's attack was sparked by Ben Decker and Sport Barrett, both tallying 13 points. For the visitors, Squilace was best with 8. Squilace left the game via the personal foul route midway in the third quarter and without his steady work the visitors yielded without much opposition.

The defensive work of Bob Boylan in the first part of the game in guarding little Beppo Squilace aided his team no end. Bob Barrett, who entered the game in the second period, accounted for 8 points for Prep.

Delhuds Win Over J. C. C. Quintet, 45-34

Before 500 enthusiastic fans, the largest amateur crowd of the season, defending champion Delaware and Hudson won the first half Heurich Amateur Basketball League championship at Heurich gymnasium last night when it defeated the Jewish Community Center's Big Five in the final game of a three-way championship play-off at Heurich gymnasium, 45 to 34.

The J. C. C., fighting back furiously, was barely trailing in the final 6 minutes, 31 to 29, when John Frank, who had played brilliant basketball for the eventual losers throughout, was removed on four personal fouls. D. and H., making the most of this break, scored handily thereafter.

at Charlotte, he began to justify that confidence.

He was the leading pitcher in the Piedmont League.

Some day in the near or distant future one or two of the other young pitchers now in training with the Nats may make the big league grade, but at this writing Haynes and Krakauskas are the only candidates who look the part of immediate successes.

There are lads on whom Manager Bucky Harris is reserving opinion. Bill Kennedy, a Washington boy who is under contract to the Nats'-owned Orlando Club, has won a measure of approval. He is a left-hander. Walter Masterson, right-handed rookie who was with the club all of 1939, is getting another trial because he once looked like a brilliant prospect. Early Eynn's fast ball still intrigues the Nats' bosses. So does Louis Thuman's.

Paul Gehrman and Almon Williams had success in the fast Southern Association. But none are regarded with the same enthusiasm as Haynes and Krakky.

In no other American League training camp with the exception, perhaps of the A's and Browns, is the opportunity so inviting for young pitchers. Bucky Harris can count on only two vteerans as regulars. They are, of course, Dutch Leonard and Ken Chase. Eight other pitching jobs are wide open for rookies with even tolerable talent.

USHA Beats PWA for Title

The USHA basketball team won the second half of the Interior Department Recreation Association League last night by defeating PWA, 34 to 27, at the I. D. R. A. gymnasium.

Both teams had won nine games and lost one and were in a 12-12 tie at the half. The game was decided in the last three minutes of play when USHA pulled away with Henry Morus leading the way with 13 points. NPS, winner of the first half, will meet USHA in a three-game play-off beginning February 27 in the Interior gym.

Modest Blozis Won't Predict More Marks

Georgetown Soph Credits Coach Hardell For Recent Success

of swinging it to and fro, like a pendulum, to gather momentum. When I tried keeping my left foot down I found I could make a faster approach and also that my follow through was much improved. These tips have been invaluable to me and I can't say too much for Hap. He's a fine coach and a great fellow."

That's all very well, Al, but how about yourself? What's your background.

After much prompting, it developed that Blozis is one of three children born to Lithuanian parents. His father, Tony, was born in Lithuania, but came to this country to make his fortune. After learning that Tony, who is now a steel mills worker, stands 6 feet 2 inches and weighs 300 pounds, it's understood how Al got so large.

"But you oughta see my brother, George," Blozis laughed. "Only 15, but he's 6-feet-4 and weighs almost 190. He'll enter Dixon High School in New York next fall, and I hope he'll turn out to be a shot-putter. I'm going to work with him this summer."

If brother George achieves the track success that Al did at Dixon, then Georgetown has another intercollegiate champion in prospect for about 1945. For it was at Dixon that Blozis began to go places in shot-putting under the coaching of Claire Burch. Only 17 in his senior year, Blozis nevertheless was the national interscholastic shot-put and discus champion.

At Georgetown the big Lithuanian is a popular figure with his team mates and the student body at large. Moreover, he is making better than average marks in the toughest course of them all—science. Al hopes to major in chemistry.

Syphilis Cost In D. C. High, Leiby Finds

Prevention Failure Boosts Expense Among Insane

Syphilis is just as prevalent among white Washingtonians earning $3,000 or more per year as among those earning between $1,000 and $3,000, according to Dr. George M. Leiby, venereal disease expert of the Health Bureau.

He spoke before 1,300 persons yesterday at two sessions of the WPA Health Institute in the Departmental Auditorium, Thirteenth street and Constitution avenue.

Dr. Leiby pointed out that between 200 and 300 of the District's insane patients at St. Elizabeth's Hospital are venereal disease victims. The annual cost to the District is approximately $500,000, as compared with $50,000 spent for clinical, preventive treatment. He pointed out that conditions here were duplicated throughout the country.

60,000 Cases in District

Based on its prevalence in proportion to population, as shown by surveys, Washington has about 60,000 cases of syphilis, Dr. Leiby said. He added that, with public cooperation, both syphilis and gonorrhea may be controlled in the present generation.

The venereal disease control officer warned that 45 per cent of syphilis victims, if untreated, develop heart disease and 25 per cent brain disease. With treatment, these percentages are reduced to about 4 per cent.

Infant Death Toll Heavy

Sixty-five per cent of babies born to infected mothers who are untreated during pregnancy are dead at birth and 25 per cent more die before they're 1 year old.

A survey in North Carolina, Dr. Leiby pointed out, revealed that the average person with syphilis died at 32; those without it at 58.

Contract Bridge

By Florence Osborn.

From the fraternity of advertising men comes the story of a breathtaking and almost unbelievable deal in which declarer, against a less favorable opening lead, would have to give up a spade trick to win his six-spade contract, although he holds ten trumps, including the ace, king, queen.

Here is what G. D., the contributor, writes:

"Thought you might like to see a hand that came up in rubber bridge (cost me some dough, too) that is interesting because it is a freak. Don't remember the bidding, but the final contract was six spades by South:

	♠ 5 2 ♡ A K Q 8 7 6 5 ◇ 7 2 ♣ 8 6
♠ J 3 ♡ J 10 9 4 3 ◇ K J 8 3 ♣ 10 5	NORTH WEST EAST SOUTH	♠ 10 ♡ 2 ◇ Q 9 6 5 4 ♣ Q J 9 7 4 3
	♠ A K Q 9 8 7 6 4 ♡ None ◇ A 10 ♣ A K 2

"I was East; my partner opened the jack of spades. The five in dummy provided the re-entry to the hearts, and seven was made.

"A low spade opening will not stop six, as South can make the contract by giving up a spade trick to West. On leading the third club to ruff in dummy, if West ruffs with the spade jack, then the five again provides the entry, declarer leading his four to it.

"Only one lead stops the contract, the unnatural one from the diamond king-jack."

A Negro folk musician with the somewhat informal name of "Lead Belly" is Alan Lomax's guest on the American School of the Air this forning on WJSV at 9:15.

This is session of the School of the Air that deals with the folks music of America and to our mind one of the most interesting programs on anybody's air. The most peculiar and the most familiar things turn up: Lead Belly, for instance, is the folk-musician whom Alan Lomax and his father, John A., brought from the obscurity of a chain gang to national prominence.

This program will trace the progres sof Negro work songs through the South from Virginia to Texas as the laborers who originated them wandered over that route seeking work. Negro work songs were brought to America in Colonial days by plantation slaves imported from Africa. Plantation owners found their help worked best while singing and it was the custom to employ a song leader, or chanty boy. There were songs for every type of work. "Lead Belly," who by his strength and powers of endurance was always in the lead on the chain gang, will sing the parts of the chanty boy in this broadcast and the Golden Male Quartet will sing the accompanying workers' lines. The Lomaxes consider Ledbetter (it seems "Lead Bell" is known formally as Huddie Ledbetter) one of their most important finds. He comes from Louisiana of a musicial family and began his career as an itinerant guitar player.

Speaking of folk music, somewhere from distant and long ago childhood we remember a chanty the last two lines of which are: 'Combed his hair with a wagon wheel; died with a toothache in his heel." These may not be accurate but, dear, dear reader, if you know the hole thing, please tell us, for we can not sleep days anymore trying to remember that verse.

NUTS AND JOLTS

"I Take This Man"

BY ANNE TEDLOCK BROOKS

Brenda realized suddenly and clearly that Alan was in love with her. He took her hand and touched each finger gently. "Please say you'll see me every night," he pleaded

Chapter 5

BRENDA awakened early on Thursday. She hurriedly made her toast and coffee, flying about the little kitchenette in a loose robe over her blue pajamas. She drank orange juice and was going in to take her bath when the maid came in. Alan Tremaine was coming for dinner, everything must be perfect.

Marta was of good substantial Swedish parentage, and had inherited a love for willingness and work. She smiled at Brenda and with one swoop almost cleared the table.

"I'll go to the market first thing, Miss Holliway. You'd like some little artichokes. And some of Pedro's sauce for the steaks?"

She is a jewel, Brenda thought. "Yes, Marta. I've made out a menu. Buy everything you need, and use my prettiest lunch cloth. Set the table up in here in front of the fireplace, please."

Marta nodded. And Brenda knew that the apartment would literally shine when she returned from the office in the evening. It was going to be fun, having Alan for dinner. She had been eating late suppers in restaurants last week, trying to get the rest of the work done on the contract for a food company.

Today would see the completion of that work, and she knew that Cary Winship had been more than pleased with it yesterday when he came in for a short time to see how she was getting along.

Cary had been serious with her, but other than that, their relationship had been as before the week-end party. He had not once asked her to lunch with him, and although she missed it more than she would let her mind dwell upon it, Brenda appreciated it.

In Cary's Office

Today she had her lunch sent in to her office, and she finished the last of her drawings about 4 o'clock in the afternoon. She gathered the great sheaf of them together in her portfolio and took them to Cary.

She tapped at his door and his secretary opened it. "Sorry Miss Holliway, Mrs. Winship is here just now."

"Call me, won't you, Mary, when she leaves? I've finished the food pictures." She could not bear to see Lynne.

The girl nodded and smiled. "I'm anxious to see the rest of them. I thought the first ones were grand." Admiration shone out of her eyes and Brenda went back into her office with the warmth of the smile cheering her.

She decided to go by the florist's stand on the corner and get some flowers for the table. She wondered what Alan would like. For a moment she wished it were Cary Winship coming to dinner. Her cheeks flamed and then grew white as she heard the door to Cary's office close. That was his wife leaving.

Presently her buzzer sounded and she went into Cary's office. Lynne had left a trail of her own special perfume and Brenda saw a pretty handkerchief with her initials, lying on the shining mahogany desk. Brenda's hands were cold. "I must not feel this. I can't! Lynne is his wife. I am his employe," she thought to herself.

Cary stood up briefly. "Mary says you're through with the food drawings. I'm to get them out by the end of the week. Think the printers can make it?"

"Of course, if you think these are satisfactory."

He spread them out on the desk and together they went over them. Cary's eyes brightened. Brenda had a certain gift of putting a little humorous touch to some of the sketches. Cary smiled appreciatively at one and Brenda lifted her eyes from the drawing to meet his and together they laughed.

"Oh, Brenda, you're a grand girl! I declare a holiday for you. Run and get your hat and take the afternoon, what remains of it."

"If you really think my job's complete on these——" she hesitated. "Alan Tremaine's coming to dinner tonight, and I want to put a few extra touches——"

"By all means, do go, then. Alan's a very lucky fellow to have found you so soon." Cary said in a quiet tone. He hated for Alan to have even an evening with Brenda.

Anticipation

Brenda, going down in the elevator a few minutes later, wondered if Lynne and Cary were going to the Royal on the fifteenth of the next month.

She had forbidden herself to think too much about them, but knowing Lynne was at his office this afternoon, forced her to remember the last time she had seen them together.

Finding nerself in front of a florist's shop, she paused at the window a moment. It was a riot of color today, and she felt confused. Then she discovered a small blue pottery bowl filled with yellow baby mums. It was just what she needed.

She made her purchases and walked down the street in the sunshine. The crisp air felt good and she breathed deeply. Instead of a taxi she stepped on a bus and reached home by 5 o'clock.

Marta was surprised at her early return and came in inquiringly from the kitchenette. Brenda followed her sniffing the warm spicy odors of a Swedish bread that was baking.

She unwrapped her pottery bowl of mums and Marta exclaimed, "They are so beautiful, they'll help make the food taste better."

"Your food doesn't need any help, Marta, and you know it!"

Marta's broad face flushed and she laughed pleasantly.

Brenda rested until 7 and taking a leisurely bath she dressed in a bright red plaid frock. The long skirt swirled around with a swish of its taffeta folds as she walked and Marta gasped in appreciation. Its jacket was fastened high at Brenda's throat, and she looked like a little girl dressed up.

Alan Arrives

Brenda knew an unexplainable exciting moment when Alan's ring at the door came. She let him in herself. Alan, tall and handsome, carried a folder in one hand.

He was in black and white and his grooming was immaculate. "It's so good of you to ask me," he said.

They seated themselves before the fire which Marta had laid, and Alan said: "Mind if I look about at your place? It's so attractive and cozy."

The room was a picture. Brenda has a positive genius for using the right colors and the right furnishings, he thought. And what a background it made for her! Brenda, dressed in red, was a different Brenda than he had yet seen. His eyes lingered on her for a long moment.

"I just mixed the cocktails," she said. He sprang to his feet. "Let me get them, please."

He took the shaker from the table near the divan and poured two small ones.

"To Brenda's and Alan's friendship," he smiled. "May it last forever." He wanted to say, our love.

Brenda's eyes held a startled gleam for a second. Then she smiled. "Thanks, Alan." It was the first time they'd used each other's first names and they seemed more like old acquaintances now.

They smoked a leisurely cigarette, and Martha brought in the little table.

It was a gay evening. They talked over their early lives. Alan, sipping some of his younger days, lingered more over his adventures in South America. He showed her some pictures and blueprints of the mines, and Brenda learned of the different types of men working under him. She was interested in the natives and in the animal life in the jungles.

She Tells Her Story

Alan made her talk of herself, too, and she drew a clear picture of the girl who had known so little of luxury and so much of hard work all of her life that Alan must have shown his admiration too clearly because with embarrassment she changed the subject.

"When are you going back, Alan?"

"I have almost a month. I'm expecting to enjoy it more than I have the last two visits."

Brenda remembered Margot Alexander of the other evening. Perhaps she and Alan were going to marry after all. But Alan said: "I hope that you will let me monopolize your time, if you're not too busy in the evenings. I have only a month, you know, and I find that it is not going to be long enough."

Brenda realized suddenly and clearly. Alan was in love with her. He took her hand and touched each finger gently. "Please say you'll see me almost every night."

Brenda's heart leaped. If only it were not that she already loved Cary Winship, she might find love with Alan. She leaned her head back against the divan.

"Yes, Alan, I'll see you as often as we can arrange." Perhaps she could forget Cary if she went about with Alan.

Dates With Alan

Alan Tremaine became almost a nightly caller at Brenda's apartment. They went to the theatres, to the opera, to night clubs; or they just sat and talked after they had eaten dinner, either at one of Alan's favorite restaurants where he was constantly surprising her, or one of Marta's dinners.

Alan knew he had to have Brenda's love. He was restless and unhappy without her near.

Brenda told herself that she was happy with Alan. He was so attentive, he was so much in love with her that she found it exciting to do things for him.

She saw Cary during office hours. Once they had run into each other at a party. Cary and Alan exchanged partners, and Brenda was happy in Cary's arms dancing with him.

Alan was a good dancer, she had found, in spite of his lonely life in the tropics. And she enjoyed dancing with him.

Once in his office, Cary said, "Aren't you having quite an exciting life, Brenda, going about with Tremaine?"

"Alan's lots of fun, Cary," she had answered gravely. She wanted to say, "I'd rather be with you."

"I hear that you're together constantly. Anything to it?" He smiled at her a wan sort of smile. "He's a fine fellow, Brenda."

"Oh, we do go out often. But then, Alan's leaving soon, you know. And it will be years before he gets back."

Only a week remained of Alan's time now, and then he would sail. Cary knew that Alan was in love with Brenda. Every one knew it. It was too obvious. Those who had predicted an understanding with Margot and Alan were now speaking of Alan's new love, the beautiful dark-haired Brenda Holliway.

Brenda had grown thinner during the last few weeks, and told herself that as soon as Alan left she would settle down, go to bed early and rest more. But that was not the cause of it, she knew. It was the intensity of her desire to be with Cary that was consuming her vitality.

Probers Told Of Firmer Farm Sales

Mortgage Situation Improves, Insurance Chiefs Declare

By the Associated Press

An official of the Prudential Insurance Co. of America—which owns $45,000,000 of American farm land—expressed the opinion to the Monopoly Committee yesterday that the "farm situation is becoming adjusted and stabilized" in the wake of a period of extensive foreclosures.

At the same time, however, R. R Rogers, Prudential vice president, warned that there were many uncertainties in the farm outlook, such as drought and war, and said it was "useless to believe the Government can ever let go of the farmer's hand until some sound program has been developed that will enable him to go along on his own feet."

The Prudential official and Glen Rogers, farm loan manager for Metropolitan Life Insurance Co., both testified that their companies were anxious to make more farm loans and to sell land acquired in foreclosures as rapidly as possible.

The Metropolitan official said he considered it desirable to dispose of owned property for "social" reasons, although he believed operation of farms through tenants, once the properties were rehabiliated, would be more profitable to the company than mortgage lending.

R. R. Rogers said that, aside from social considerations, he considered "farming is for farmers" and told the committee that Prudential was selling 20 per cent of the land it owned each year and hoped that "five years will see us out of the farming business."

Glen Rogers told the committee that the company usually required a 10 per cent down payment when selling to a farmer, but sometimes sold for as little as 3 per cent down on a "character sale." Speculators and non-residents, he added, were required to put up 20 per cent.

Prudential, its official said, sought to encourage tenants to become owners by selling to farmers with no money down, and under contracts whereby a farmer acquired his first stake through a share in each year's crop for three years.

The company, he testified, increased its investment in farm mortgages from $126,380,000 in 1935 to $167,298,000 in 1938.

Expressing the opinion that the wave of foreclosures is now over, Rogers said the company had foreclosed on 29.8 per cent of the farms on which it lent money and had acquired 13,500 farms in the process. By last year all but 5,940 farms had been sold.

The company, he added, recovered the book cost and all improvements on the property it sold. Real estate carried on the books of the company at the present time, he said, is valued at 96.25 per cent of the total amount of the mortgages before foreclosure.

HAPPY RELIEF FROM PAINFUL BACKACHE

Many of those gnawing, nagging, painful backaches people blame on colds or strains are often caused by tired kidneys—and may be relieved when treated in the right way.

The kidneys are Nature's chief way of taking excess acids and poisonous waste out of the blood. They help most people pass about 3 pints a day.

If the 15 miles of kidney tubes and filters don't work well, poisonous waste matter stays in the blood. These poisons may start nagging backaches, rheumatic pains, loss of pep and energy, getting up nights, swelling, puffiness under the eyes, headaches and dizziness. Frequent or scanty passages with smarting and burning sometimes shows there is something wrong with your kidneys or bladder.

Don't wait! Ask your druggist for Doan's Pills, used successfully by millions for over 40 years. They give happy relief and will help the 15 miles of kidney tubes flush out poisonous waste from your blood. Get Doan's Pills.

Everett Urges Action on District Needs

The "too frequent practice" of demanding surveys to remedy bad conditions in Washington's social welfare program was assailed yesterday by Ray H. Everett, executive secretary of the D. C. Social Hygiene Society, speaking to guests and members of the Rotary Club at the Willard Hotel.

"Too often," he said, "when bad conditions in some local institution are exposed, someone promptly calls for a 'survey.' The woods have been full of surveys for the past ten years."

Instead of ill-considered demands for new surveys, Everett suggested that results of past surveys be used to remedy current problems.

Rotary International is celebrating its thirty-fifth anniversary. Today's luncheon will feature the club's vocational service activities, with Frederick H. P. Siddons, president of the Better Business Bureau, as speaker.

After reviewing past accomplishments of local welfare agencies, Everett listed as "immediate needs":

Care of "employables," is now available; removal of the so-called "ceiling" of relief; more funds for the Health Department; more adequate care for families not eligible for relief; more personnel and equipment for Gallinger and Freedmen's Hospital; larger funds for unwed mothers and to protect their children; funds for a model home for the aged and a receiving home for children; establishment of a department for the homeless; continuance of slum clearance projects; enactment of a small-loan law which will make it unnecessary for local residents to go outside the city.

Guests at yesterday's meeting included Robert Bondy, director, Board of Public Welfare; Eugene Meyer, president, Washington Criminal Justice Association; Leonard DeGast, secretary, Y. M. C. A.; Lynn Drake, secretary, Boy Scouts; Miss Mabel T. Boardman, national director, volunteer service, Red Cross; Maj. Ernest W. Brown, police superintendent; Frederick W. McReynolds, chairman, Board of Public Welfare; James E. Colliflower, immediate past president, Police Boys' Club; Dr. George C. Ruhland, District health officer.

Charles Fyfe, director, Boys' Club of Washington; Mrs. W. A. Roberts, executive secretary, Washington Council of Social Agencies; James L. Fieser, vice chairman, Red Cross; Dr. Albert W. McCartney, chairman, Committee on Religious Life in Nation's Capital; Herbert Willett, jr., director of the Community Chest, and Mark Foote, president of the Gridiron Club.
